German Paper.—Let all our readers who live among Germans, take pains to introduce Bro. L. Reimer's German paper, designed to be to the Germans what the Crisis is to the Americans. There has been a felt need of a paper in the German language. Let efforts be made to give it success. Address L. Reimer, 639 N. 8th St., Philadelphia, Pa. M. G.

Inquiry.—Please inform me what our people, as a body, believe the Bible teaches in regard to one who has not been regularly ordained, concerning the administration of the ordinance of baptism?

Hamilton, Ont. Parker C. Marsh.

The Bible appears to be silent on the subject, consequently we, as a people, have adopted no rules bearing on this matter. It is not common, however, for persons to baptize before they are ordained to the work of the ministry. M. G.

Old Papers.—When you have read your papers, do not tear them up, but carry them to some poor family that is not able to take a paper. By this means much good may be done at small trouble and expense. When the paper is carried, a fine opportunity will be afforded to speak a word for Jesus. Many may be saved in this way. Let us do all we can to lead as many as possible to Christ. Study out ways and means by which people can be benefited. Do it for Jesus. M. G.

The Prospect.—The religious signs indicate that the coming winter will be noted for a general revival movement. Most professors are in a backslidden state, and they are beginning to feel it very sensibly, causing them to cry to the Lord for help. Whenever a church or individual will enter the valley of humiliation, ask pardon, and reform, the Lord is ever ready to bless. His Spirit is striving with the people, producing a heartfelt need of a deeper work of grace in their hearts. The favored hour has come where all who would be ready to meet Jesus should at once make to him a full consecration of their all for ever. M. G.

New York Daily Witness.—We have been taking the New York Daily Witness for a short time, and the more we examine it and compare it with other dailies, the more we prize it. As it is the only daily paper in the United States that has a decided religious tone, we commend it to all christians who wish to have such a paper live in the great metropolis of this country. It gives daily a faithful report of the wonderful meetings held by Brn. Moody and Sankey. The price of the paper is but two cents a copy, and $5 a year. Those who wish to take a weekly newspaper will find the weekly Witness just what they need. Price $1.50 a year. M. G.

Bible Reading.—We are convinced that much preaching would be more effective if there was more of Bible in it, and less of men's words and opinions. At the opening of all prayer and conference meetings, it is well to read a portion of Scripture, not enough to make it tedious, but a few verses, to afford a subject for thought and conversation. This is a very important matter with Bro. Moody in all his meetings. He seeks to magnify the word of the Lord, and the blessing of the Most High attends his efforts. A few passages of Scripture carefully examined often produce more blessed results than a whole sermon. Let us "search the Scriptures" more, and obey them fully. M. G.

Correction.—We learn that the supporters of Mrs. Ellen White and her visions, are reporting that we charged fifty cents admission to our lectures against her visions, when in California. A correspondent wishes us to say in the Crisis, whether their statement is true? It is not true. The facts are as follows: Bro. A. K. Crawford, pastor of the M. E. church, in Healdsburg, Cal, arranged to have a course of lectures given in his church to assist in paying a debt on the house. He requested us to give one of the lectures, specifying that he wished us to speak on Mrs. Ellen White's visions. We complied with his request. The price for each lecture in the course was fifty cents, but the money was for the benefit of the church. M. G.

A Stormy Look.—There is a stormy state of things arising between Austria, Russia and Germany about the Turkish question, as the following news item indicates:

London, Nov. 9. It is rumored here that a split has occurred in the alliance formed between Austria, Russia, and Germany regarding the Herzegovinian troubles.

Austria threatens to occupy the territory of Herzegovina, and Russia threatens to take possession of the Danubian principalities.

Should this happen, England will seize Egypt and the Island of Crete.

It is quite evident that Turkey is a burdensome stone among the great powers of Europe, and must be disposed of before long, regardless of consequences. M. G.

The Eastern Question" is again agitating the great European powers. It is difficult for them to let it alone long at a time. Whenever it comes up for final adjustment, it is believed by candid and careful students of prophecy that the close of the present dispensation will soon take place. It is thought that when either of the great powers lays hands upon Turkey, that then the time will have come for the opening of the final drama in this world's history. It is said, "The impression continues to gather strength that the possession of Constantinople by the Russians is inevitable," and that "the English occupation of Egypt is only a question of time." Says a careful observer, "The 'Eastern Question' is manifestly again the grand question which agitates all Europe." M. G.

Springfield.—The interest in the Springfield meetings continues to increase daily. The church is in the best condition we have ever seen it, and sinners are coming to Christ and obtaining pardon. The prospect is very encouraging. Yesterday (Sabbath, Nov. 7th) was a blessed day. The morning love-feast was a feast indeed. The Spirit of Jesus was blessedly present. It four P. M. we spoke to the prisoners in the jail. Some thirty or forty requested prayers. We are expecting to see a glorious work in Springfield during the coming winter. The different churches are contemplating a series of union meetings. All true christians begin to feel it is time to make special efforts to save the people. The Lord is stirring the people up to work. The omens are bright. M. G.

The Spirit of Papacy.—A Roman Catholic priest, "Father Henning," of St. Louis, has lately expressed the position of the Roman Catholics in relation to all political governments, especially the American. Of course he speaks the mind of the Pope, and, consequently, of every true Ultramontane Catholic in the world. He is reported to have spoken as follows:

"It is the duty of every Catholic to vote for a Catholic candidate. . . . The church, as we all are bound to believe as Catholics, is infallible. She is infallible in faith; she is infallible in something more—she is infallible in everything, in morals as well as in faith, and it follows that the State can never be absolutely separate from the church; that the declaration of independence of the State from the Church, is simply political atheism. . . . It follows that a Catholic must be a Catholic in his social and political life, as well as in his religious life."

Such is the instruction being given to the two hundred million Catholics in the world. Such counsel will hasten on the coming conflict. M. G.

Bro. Moody is seeing very rich fruits of his labors in Brooklyn. Many have given their hearts to Jesus, and are rejoicing in his love. The Holy Spirit is moving the people in a powerful manner. To the Lord be all the praise. We may expect to see and hear of greater things before the winter is changed to spring. Philadelphia is preparing a place for Bro. Moody's meetings that will hold some ten thousand people. He expects to commence there the 21st of Nov. We learn New York has hired Barnum's Hippodrome for Bro. Moody in January, at a cost of $1300 a week.

Let us ask the Lord to pour out his Spirit all over the country, and do all we can by personal efforts to lead the people to Jesus. Now is our time to work. Let there be no delay. Every minister, individual christian, and church, should enter heartily into the revival work at once. Do something to-day for Jesus.

Bro. Moody says he adopted the rule long ago, not to let a day pass without speaking to some sinner on the subject of his salvation. The Lord has most signally honored and blest his faithfulness. M. G.

THE SPIRIT OF UNION.

The Lord is doing a wonderful work in the hearts of his dear children in all parts of the world, by leading them into a oneness, quite like that felt by the church in the first century. Of course this spirit of union is not felt by those who are conformed to this world, obeying its foolish fashions and customs, but by those who are filled with the Holy Spirit, having surrendered their all to Jesus by an everlasting spirit. This union is not among all the members of any denomination, but between a portion out of all. It is not a union of creeds, but of hearts. Each may hold his peculiar theological views as firmly as ever, but the union produced by the gift of the Spirit is much stronger than the repelling power of the theological differences in the minds of christian men, consequently the union is abiding, loving, and blessed in its results. This, to us, is a bright evidence that the bride is getting ready to welcome her coming Bridegroom.

In every city, village and town, those who truly love Jesus should have a union prayer-meeting, if no more, and make special efforts to save sinners, and arouse the backslidden, before it is too late for them to make preparation for the great event, now at our doors. Let there be much prayer, that the Lord will help us all to be one in Christ, that we may be fully prepared to meet him at his coming. These are days of thrilling interest in the history of the world. Its closing scenes are fast approaching. Thank the Lord, we are almost home. Soon we shall see the dear Jesus, who died to save us from destruction. Let us do all we can to please him, and to lead others to become his loving disciples. M. G.

WHAT ARE WE DOING?

As a people it seems as though we were doing but a very little, compared with what we might accomplish. Glorious and important truths have been committed to our trust, which ought to cause us to be the most earnest, devoted, self-sacrificing, and united people in the world, doing more than any others to save sinners. We are sure the good sense of all who read this will respond, Amen. Yet we know this is not the case. What will produce the desired result? We know of but one remedy, and that is entire consecration to Christ, in order to be filled with the Holy Spirit, which is the quickening power, without which there will be dullness, stupidity, and indifference about the salvation of sinners, sectarianism, discord, worldly-mindedness, bigotry, covetousness, pride, variance, hatren, backbiting and evil-speaking, resulting in backsliding, and a place at last among the foolish virgins.

The Lord, by his Spirit, is now calling upon all to make a full surrender to him, so that he can take complete possession, and fill them with his pure Spirit, leading the possessors to love him with all their hearts, and also to feel an intense love for sinners, and to make special efforts for their salvation. Is it not time to have a careful examination before the Lord, asking him to search us most thoroughly, and point out that which is displeasing in his sight, promising most solemnly to correct every wrong as soon as it is made known? Let us go down, down into into the dust before the Lord, and make the fullest possible surrender of our all to him for ever and ever; and then we shall be ready to work in his vineyard, or to meet him at his coming. Shall the consecration be made? What says the will? The judgment, reason and conscience say yes. Let the will submit at once. M. G.

THE SICK MAN.

The Turkish Empire has been significantly and appropriately called for many years "The sick man." This expressive title was given to it on account of its great decline from its former wealth, power, and commanding position among the ruling nations of the world and the threatening influences and circumstances which are thrown around it, strongly tending to dissolve the compact or break up the government. As long as these circumstances and principles continue, the sickness must continue; and if they increase in power the results must become more alarming. In that case the recovery becomes more hopeless, and the dissolution more imminent and certain. The case becomes more threatening when all the known remedies for such a disease have been applied, and all the skillful nursing of friends has been exhausted, and still the invalid sinks under the accumulating weight of disease.

In such cases the heirs at law, or those claiming inherent rights to the estate of the dying proprietor, especially when the estate is valuable, commence to discuss their claims and heirship to the pending inheritance, and often make preparations to defend those claims when the case comes to adjudication.

All of these facts connected with many sick men make the above title very expressive and significant as it is figuratively applied to Turkey. Her decline in wealth, military and naval power, diplomatic influence among the great nations, unity among her vassal states, and the hope of coming prosperity, has continued so long, and become so rapid, and the final death scene is apparently so near, that her neighbors and heirs, we cannot say friends, for she is friendless, have for a long time spent more time and treasure in making preparations for the death of the "sick man," and to defend their claims to his estate than for any other object, excepting one, now interesting the European nations.

The emphatic, political questions of the age are, What shall be the future of the Crescent at Constantinople, and the Tiara at Rome? or shall the Sultan's and the Pope's governments survive the mighty political convulsions now tumultuously shaking all thrones? All eyes are turned to these two Roman capitals, watching with breathless anxiety the awful struggles of two sinking potentates, as they reach out their death palsied arms imploring assistance from the angry, perplexed nations.

Can it be possible that a believer in the Bible, as a book giving the prophetic history of the great events of this world, can believe that such circumstances as these would be omitted by God in the catalogue of important scenes and changes in human experience?

We believe they are made as prominent on the page of prophetic history as they are now being made on the page of profane history. The two powers, occupying the two capitals of Rome, must of necessity sink together under the wave of the last judgment, when the iron kingdom falls into the pit of everlasting perdition. The same manifestation of divine wrath that sinks the great harlot in the "sea" of complete, irremedial ruin will produce the death spasms of the "Sick Man" in the "glorious holy mountain."

These events are divinely located at the resurrection of the dead and the commencement of Michael's reign, when there shall be "heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

The harlot will sink when boasting, "I shall be a lady forever." "I am, and none else beside me."

The "Sick Man" will be driven to the wall by a mighty antagonist; and in a dependent condition, seeking assistance from others, will "come to his end," because "none shall help him." How wonderfully striking are these prophetic descriptions of the two great powers when compared with the facts now being developed in their history.

The Papacy is boastful and defiant, assuming to have a right to all earthly power and glory, while Turkey crouches under the weight of her accumulating corruptions, maladministration and clamorous factions, piteously imploring help from her jealous neighbors.

Turkey's existence, as a political government in Europe, has been protracted for the last fifty years by help she has received from the great Christian powers. They have defended it, not because they considered it a desirable, self-supporting government, but because they saw that it was becoming feeble and incapable of self-defence, and they considered its continuance as a vassal power more safe to Europe than the results that would naturally follow its dismemberment.

It has been understood by the principal statesmen of Europe, for a long period, that Turkey was in a condition of political consumption, and that a dissolution of the compact must inevitably sooner or later occur, and the great powers have been moving upon the stratagetical board with all their foresight and skill, determined that it should not collapse until they were each prepared to share largely in the coveted spoils.

Russia and England have been most jealous of each other in regard to the final disposition to be made of the Sultan's possessions. England has watched with anxious dread the rapid growth and increasing power of her northern peer, and has felt the increasing antagonistic forces of opposition in religion, mercantile interests, territorial possessions, and the control of the high seas. She understands that Russia claims an inherent right of heirship to the dominions of the ancient Greek empire, now in possession of the Sultan. She also understands that Russia desires above all other inheritance the throne and city of their royal Greek fathers—Constantinople—and to hold the keys of the gate of the high seas—the Dardanelles—and so open a passage-way for her galley and merchant fleets as rivals of the English fleet upon the seas, and in all foreign markets.

England's great source of wealth and power is her colonial possessions; and these can only be held safely while she is mistress of the seas; therefore she greatly fears to have an empire of such vast resources as Russia permitted to freely launch her fleets, to test the game of peerage with her lion.

There has been a combination of circumstances transpiring in Europe, in the last few weeks, which have tended to unmask the Turkish government, and exhibit its sinking condition, so that all the statesmen are impressed that its final overthrow and dismemberment is certain and quite near at hand. As England is more desirous to have the Turkish government maintained than either of the other European states, her journalists are more inclined to write hopefully of its future. But it is very perceptible that their hopeful tone is rapidly changing to that of despair, while English capitalists are now as never before threatened with losing very large sums invested in Turkish securities.

The strength and permanence of a government is generally measured by its financial resources, or its ability to support armies and navies sufficient to defend itself against its foes. An editorial upon this subject recently appeared in the London Times, with a very significant heading, in which some very important statements are made. It presents the subject in the following words:—

TURKEY IN DISHONESTY AND DECAY.

There are are some incidents which, though long foreseen, always excite surprise when they occur, and of this nature is the announcement which was made by the Turkish Government last week that it had summarily decided to cheat its creditors. The debt of Turkey requires more than twelve and a half millions a year to pay its interest, and the proposal is to spend half this sum for five years, giving bonds bearing interest for the amount. Thus, the principal of the debt would go on increasing, so that at the end of the five years it would amount to over thirty-one millions more, and in the meantime the Government of repudiation and roguery may find itself obliged to stop payment altogether, and perhaps go to pieces in some violent way. . . .

Some centuries ago, when Turkey had the good fortune to be ruled by energetic Sultans, the peculation of the Pachas and the robbery of the feudal chiefs were restrained to a considerable extent, and, instead of being the most backward, she was one of the most advanced countries in the world. In modern times all useful energy has declined. For a long time the rule of Turkish life has been that all power should rob those below, and bribe those above them; and the present Sultan has passed his days in the licentious idleness customary in courts where polygamy prevails. Whether the Ottoman Empire is destined to fall quickly or crumble slowly is a matter for conjecture; but no one anticipates recovery to strength and health as a possible event. Happily for Europe, it does not suit the policy of Russia to precipitate the downfall of a government which, though abominably bad, is better than complete anarchy and a scramble among the European Powers for territory or dominating influence.

We do hope that every intelligent reader, who has any opportunity of examining the prophetic history of the Ottoman Empire and the comments made upon them by the best ecclesiastical writers, will compare the descriptions given of it during its last days with what is now being said of its present condition by competent political writers, and they cannot fail to see that the latter most perfectly duplicates the former. Nearly all of these writers agree—and this has been the faith of our people from the beginning—that this government would decline in power as it draws near the end of the gospel age.

Why does this Englishman say, "Happily for Europe, it does not suit the policy of Russia to precipitate the downfall of a government which, though abominably bad, is better than complete anarchy and a scramble among the European Powers for territory"? Because he knows what all other politicians know, that the policy of Russia for a long time has been to overthrow the Turkish government and take possession of the most desirable portion of its dominions. He also knows that the Western Powers have established a policy that, if Russia attempts such an aggressive movement, they will combine to prevent the Czar from taking the coveted spoils. Therefore it is happy for Europe that Russia does not precipitate—bring on hastily, prematurely—the contemplated "shock of arms."

It is certain that the statesmen of Europe are becoming exasperated with the dishonest, corrupt rulers of Turkey. Their sympathies are evaporating, and their convictions are being rapidly strengthened that it must and ought to be immediately revolutionized, driven out of Europe, and its territory occupied by some rulers more worthy. This Editor continues to say—"If the resources of Turkey did not allow her to pay her debts, she would meet with commiseration; but the fact is, her revenue is sufficient, provided her Sultan and his officials would consent to be honest. The same circumstances of waste and plunder which prevent her paying dividends will operate upon her military service, and render it extremely difficult to put down the insurrection that exists, or any uprisings that may occur."

Garibaldi, the great Italian Reformer and Revolutionist, it seems to us, sounds the prophetic note of Turkey's downfall—doubtless unconscious that it is prophetic—in the following remarkable letter:

"To my brothers of the Herzegovina and to the oppressed of Eastern Europe—The Turk must go away to Broussa. He descended like a wolf, passing the Bosphorus, devastating, murdering, and violating those populations who gave us the Pelasgi, who were, perhaps, the first civilizers of Europe. He must no longer tread upon that part of the world kept by him in misery. At Broussa, with his vices, depredations, and cruelties, he will find enough people of Asia Minor to torment and plunge into desolation. Rise, then, heroic sons of Montenegro, Herzegovina, Bosnia, Servia, Therapia, Macedonia, Greece, Epirus, Albania, Bulgaria, and Roumania! All of you have a most splendid history. Among you were born Leonidas, Achilles, Alexander, Scanderbeg, and Spartacus. And to-day, even among your robust populations, you may still find a Sparticus and a Leonidas. Do not trust Diplomacy. That old woman without a heart certainly deceives you. But with you are all the men of heart throughout the world. England herself, till to-day favorable to the Turks, has manifested to you, by means of the obolus and sympathy of one of her great men, that she ought to prefer the alliance and gratitude of a confederation of free peoples to the decrepit confederation of the Empire of the Crescent. Then to Broussa with the Turk! Only thus can you make yourselves independent and free. On this side of the Bosphorus the fierce Ottoman will always be under the stimulant of eternal war, and you will never obtain the sacred rights of man."

The most important feature of this great subject is the manifest growing jealousy between the Western Powers and Russia in relation to Russia's artful diplomatic schemes at Constantinople to manage the whole matter according to its own policy. The London Times says—

"Nor are the Turks likely to crush their adversary. They have not been allowed by Austria to send fresh reinforcements to Bosnia and Herzegovina; they have not reduced the interest on the national debt, and in consequence are temporarily incapacited from borrowing money; and to crown all, Husein Avni Pasha, the energetic chief of the Military Department, has been sent to the right about, being suspected of English and German leanings at a moment when none but Russia is to rule at Constantinople. The diplomatic aspect of affairs is hardly more promising than the military view."

The plain English of the sentence is this: Russian diplomacy rules at Constantinople instead of English and German, who wish the Sultan to make such reforms as to make permanent peace with his vassal subjects; but Russia does not wish for such peace, for she is nearly ready to make her final move to completely subjugate the Sultan's government, and she expects the co-operation of these oppressed classes to assist her in the grand movement; consequently she wishes them to be in a restless, dissatisfied condition, ready to assist any Power which shall offer to break the galling yoke of their oppression. The writer continues the subject and says—

"Of course the Imperial circular is applauded at St. Petersburg, where some people consider it their primary duty to prevent the Oriental question from being worked by Austria when Russia is not in a position to regulate the business in accordance with her own particular programme. . . . . It is most unfortunate that the Sultan, continuing his indiscreet system of government, should flatter himself he has weathered the storm when the difficulty is as complicated as ever. As matters stand, the rebellion will probably survive the winter. While the Insurgents go on with their spasmodic raids amid snow and ice, there is the danger that the Powers will have time to form into groups to connect other questions with that of the East, and to prepare to take sides should the fray be prolonged."

How wonderful and impressive are these facts when compared with God's description of certain great Powers which are represented as playing a conspicuous part in earth's last fearful conflict. Daniel's king of the north—Turkey—is followed by the prophetic eye to the "glorious holy mountain"—Palestine—where he meets "his end," his everlasting overthrow, because "none shall help him." Garibaldi exhorts the oppressed classes to arise and drive "the wolf," or "decrepit confederation of the empire of the Crescent," back across the "Bosphorus" into "Asia Minor," where God says "he shall come to his end." At the same place and time Ezekiel saw in vision Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal—the Czar of all the Russias"—marching a great army, many "bands" or nationalities, to the land of Israel," the "holy mountain," where Turk and Muscovite will meet in deadly conflict, as they unbosom long pent-up revenge, and roll the car of war over the falling ranks of uncounted thousands. Then shall all the creatures of earth, "fishes," "fowls," "and men," "upon the face of the earth," "shake" at God's "presence," as the last vials of his wrath are poured out in "great hailstones, fire, and brimstone." See Ezek. 38.

Is it not astonishing that many of the most learned and pious servants of the church, such as Newton, Clark, Smith, and many others, should so interpret these prophecies as to find proof that preparatory to the "last battle," "Turkey and Russia would experience deadly hostility to each other, and in their strategetical movements would meet in Palestine for their last and decisive battle? And is it not wonderful that now, while all the world understands that Russia is determined to destroy the Ottoman Power, and is straining every nerve to extend her railroads, and is opening her military paths leading directly towards the "holy mountain"; while Garibaldi and many of the wisest statesmen say that the Turkish government should be no longer tolerated in Europe, but driven to "Asia Minor,"—is it not astonishing, we say, with all this overwhelming proof, that the great body of Christian teachers now see no signs of the immediate approach of the "battle of the great day of God Almighty"? Inspiration prolongs the awful prediction, and says, "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth." Rev. 16: 14, 15. Watcheth to see the signs of the approaching conflict, the foretold preparations and conditions of the specified nations, so that the garments of righteousness obtained by faith may not be wanting, and the shame of blindness and unbelief may not drive us to call for rocks and mountains to fall upon us.

Brethren in Christ, we say to you confidently that the "sick man's" symptoms were never to us so clearly indicative of immediate death as they are to-day. The Crescent and Tiara are both sinking under the dark wave of war and revolution. The world is stirred with fearful expectancy. Kings' councils hold perpetual sessions, and their warriors sleep on their arms. The capitalist turns the key on his wealth, the laborers cry for just wages, while the friends of Jesus look upon all these things as the sure precursors of the speedy advent of their glorious King. THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

I am interested about the General Conference, but it seems to me that the better way to organize it would be to make the Annual Conferences the bodies from which to choose the delegates, they having power to choose any lay or preaching brother in their limits who is in sympathy, the preachers being members of the Conference. I like the idea of its having charge of the publishing interests, but if the Conference gets its membership from the churches, the same source from which the Annual Conferences get them, the body would not be a proper one for appeal for or from the Annual Conference. How often, then, would the Editors be chosen? probably once in two or four years.

I think the better way to arrange the proxy vote would be for distant conferences or churches, as the case may be, to elect some person or persons, near to where the Conference is to be held, and give to such instructions how to vote. All of which is submitted. L. C. McKinstry.

An invitation has been sent to Moody and Sankey by a conference of missionaries in India, to visit that part of the British Empire.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THE WORK IN ALABAMA.

To the A. A. M. Society.

Dear Brethren:—I will try to report my labors since I reached home from North Carolina.

The first Saturday and Sunday in October I was with the church at Ooltewah, Tenn., and found the brethren and sisters anxious to hear the news from campmeeting. The second Saturday and Sunday at Shilo church, in De Kalb county, Ala. We continued the meeting over until Wednesday. Brn. J. J. Smith and D. B. Waldrop, of our church, and Bro. Thos. Payne of the M. E. Church South, were with me and helped to preach the word. Seven were added to the church, among them Bro. F. M. Avans, a minister, and wife. Two years ago he wrote me a letter warning me to beware of "the rotten northern doctrine." Now he is convinced it is truth, and comes out to defend it. The others who joined were Bro. Richard P. Shattuck, wife, and two sons, formerly of Whitefield, N. H., and Sr. Melinda Smith, little daughter of Bro. and Sr. J. J. Smith, who, with the sons of Bro. and Sr. Shattuck, were to be baptized, and for that purpose I sent an appointment to the school-house near Bro. J. J. Smith's for the fifth Saturday and Sunday. The third Saturday and Sunday at Oak Grove, where the devil has tried so hard to ruin us by stirring up the minds of the people and fillling them with prejudice. Bro. Geo. W. Crawford was with us there. The audience was small, but we tried to give them the truth. Satan knows that the only way to keep the people from embracing God's truth is to fill them so full of prejudice that they will not go to hear. He has used his utmost skill here at Oak Grove, using some of the Orthodox ministers as tools to do his diabolical work. Nevertheless, the "little flock" still love the truth, and seem ready, if need be, to die for it.

The fourth Saturday and Sunday, Bro. D. B. Waldrop's meeting began in Pea Town, and it was my privilege to be with them on Sunday and Monday. Here I met Brn. Crawford, Avans and Waldrop. On Monday, Bro. Geo. Lowry preached on practical Bible holiness, after Bro. Crawford and myself had both spoken. God forced Bro. Lowry to ask permission to preach. I praise God we have in him (Bro. Lowry) another young man who bids fair to be useful. I believe he is one of God's chosen vessels.

Friday night before the fifth Sunday at my uncle's (Jesse Cargile), near Bro. J. J. Smith's. I tried to preach. Saturday morning went over to Bro. Smith's, and found his son, Bro. Willie Smith, very low with typhoid fever, and Bro. Smith himself almost worn out, as Bro. Willie has been sick three weeks, and Bro. S. has done all the work, besides watching by the bed-side nights. He is nearly sixty-four years old, and has spent about forty of that in the vineyard of the Lord.

Notwithstanding all the discouragements, he has agreed to go to N. C. for me in two weeks, provided Bro. Willie promises recovery. I do not presume his family had a week's supplies, and he the only earthly dependence; but when I told him it was duty for me to go to Arkansas this month, he resolved to take my place in N. C. This is what I call preaching through tribulation.

Saturday, at 11 A. M., met a few at the school-room. At night, at the dwelling of friend Guess, I met Brn. Smith, Avans, Waldrop and Lowry. It was really encouraging to look back two years, when Bro. Smith and myself were struggling alone, so far as human help is concerned, and now see how the Lord has taken care of his word. Five Advent preachers at the same meeting, beside Brn. Crawford, Stewart and Bryan, making eight in this county. Brn. Lowry and Waldrop preached.

Sunday A. M., 10½, house full. One Baptist and one Methodist minister in addition to our five Advent brethren. I tried to speak while I suffered terrible pain from rheumatism, after which we went to the water and I buried three in baptism—all in their youth; the two sons of Bro. and Sr.

Shattuck, from Whitefield, N. H., and Sr. Melinda Smith. The friends at Whitefield will doubtless be glad to know that the two young brethren, Sammie and Blakie, as they are familiarly called, have given their hearts to Jesus, and have with their father and mother united with us here in the South to bear persecution with us. Bro. Shattuck's health has greatly improved since he came South and settled on the top of Sand Mountain.

I heard that the Baptist church near Trenton, Ga., had sent a committee to wait on a young sister who had left them and joined "the Advents," to invite her to their next meeting to acknowledge she had done wrong, etc. She went, and told them she joined the "Advents" of her own free choice, and did not wish to be "pardoned" for so doing. The pastor, old Bro. Douthitt, who had me excluded for heresy three years ago, then rose, weeping, and said, "Brethren, if something is not done to prevent them, the Advents will take this country in five years." I think Satan believes just as Bro. Douthitt, for he is doing all he possibly can to ruin us, not only here, but in Arkansas.

A Methodist minister there tried hard to get the people turned against me, lest they should believe my story. When he had failed in everything else he resorted to slander, telling the people that Cargile was not respected where he is known, not regarded as a christian; that a man in Cargile's vicinity had written him thus and so. The merchants of Stevenson, the sheriff of my county, also other leading members of the Methodist and Baptist churches, who have known me from my youth, have nobly and like brethren come to my relief, and sent recommendations to the contrary.

Next Tuesday week I start for that community to answer the call of many and face the great (?) advocate of Orthodoxy. May God bless him, take away his heart of stone, and give him a heart of flesh. Bro. D. B. Waldrop has resolved to go with me and bear part of the burden. Pray for us, that God may sustain us, and that by us his truth may spread in these ends of the earth. Yours for the kingdom, J. A. CARGILE.

Stevenson, Ala., Nov. 2nd, 1875.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE SOUTHERN DISTRICT, MASS.

As I was appointed to see to the Quarterly Conference of this District, I would say a few words to the churches in reference to having a session some time the coming month, or in January, as thought best.

To the churches of New Bedford, Fairhaven, Mattapoisett, Tremont, North Carver, Plymouth, etc.; do any of you wish a Conference to begin Thursday, and hold over Sunday, to be attended by representatives of those churches and any other churches that come within the range of Plymouth and Bristol counties? Let each church consult upon the matter, and pray for direction. It should be held where it will be likely to do the most good. We ought to be more acquainted with each other, and I think a conference of this kind might bring us into closer sympathy. It ought to be held in some central town of this district, so as to accommodate all. I have no choice where it shall be holden. O Lord, direct, is my prayer. What we do must be done quickly. The Lord is at hand. We should lay aside all selfishness and personal interest in the matter. A frank, open, honest heart God approves. Let us not seek our own, but others' good.

I shall leave home next week, and shall not be back until Dec. 1st. If any wish to say anything on the subject, write to Elder J. Couch, Crisis office, and I will be satisfied with the decision, and try to attend, if possible. The special meeting of the Advent Christian Association will meet at Worcester, Dec. 14th. We shall be there, if the Lord will. Would it not be best to have it in January? God bless and fit us for the coming kingdom, is the prayer of

M. BATCHELOR, Bom.

INQUISITION.

There is now a bold attempt made to re-establish the Inquisition. The newspaper which advocates the reconstruction of this hideous engine of oppression is Le Monde, the organ of the papal nuncio at Paris. The Church says the Le Monde "has the right to resort to the employment of force, as it is in direct possession of temporal power; and the syllabus condemns the opposite idea." It asserts that the canonical form of that right, in a Christian State, is the Inquisition. "The Popes have established and always maintained this tribunal." There is no mistaking this language. It means what Gladstone so recently told the nations—that "Rome is refurbishing the weapons which it was fondly believed she had abandoned for ever."—N. Y. Witness.

Beware of the "Roman scarlet." Beware of the Babylonish adorning—the cardinal red! It is doomed! H. PRATT.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. Durkee.

It is a little over a year since I heard the first sermon preached, setting forth the truths so dear to me now, by Bro. M. R Miles, in a tent at Ira. At the close of these meetings, having a desire to be an accepted follower of Christ, I gladly yielded in obedience to his blessed command, and was baptized. From that time the light has seemed to shine more and more brightly upon the sacred word. As all must admit that true faith or confidence in the goodness and promises of God must be tried, and as the journey of life is surrounded with its trials and temptations, I too have had some to contend with; but notwithstanding this, I have trusted in God, and blessings, great and innumerable, have followed me since. Grace and peace have indeed been multipled unto me through the knowledge of God. I desire to live in continued obedience, which will secure a fadeless crown in the coming kingdom.

Ira.

From Sr. N. M. Tripp.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I wish all that are truly interested in the salvation of sinners would pray for us here in Alfred. Our little Chapel has been closed nearly all the past summer and fall, but we have now commenced meetings again, and I do pray that they may be continued, and that much good may be done here in the name of the Lord.

We had three meetings last Sabbath, Nov. 5th; social meeting in the forenoon, preaching in the afternoon, and prayer-meeting in the evening, which was very good. Quite a number came out. It is my earnest desire that good may be done in this place and vicinity before the Lord does come, that some more may be gathered in. Do pray for the meetings here, that sinners may be converted and be getting ready for the coming of the Lord, and that those that profess to be the Lord's may get down deeper into the work of the Lord.

If the effectual fervent prayer of one righteous man availeth much, it seems as though if all of God's children would pray earnestly for the blessing of God to rest upon them, that much good might be done. Well, let us pray for each other, that we may be kept by the mighty power of God, and then be presented blameless before him at his coming. From your sister in hope of eternal life.

Alfred, Me., Nov. 9th.

J. ALBERT LIBBY, West Poland, Me., Nov. 15th, writes:—"Dear Brn. and Srs.,—For three weeks I have been sick with billious fever, attended with a severe cough, and my strength is much reduced; but my trust is in the Lord, and I hope soon to be at my appointed work. Pray for me."

Obituaries.

PARKER. In Albert Lea, Minn., Oct. 17th, our beloved father, Luther Parker, in the seventieth year of his age.

The first cause of his illness arose from having his foot frost-bitten ten years ago. Ten months ago, he had part of his foot amputated, and the first succeeded the second, and yet no relief, and still another painful operation, which severed his foot nearly to the knee, which was more than his vital power could endure, and he sank to sleep, to awake in the morning of the resurrection. He leaves an aged widow, and seven children to mourn his loss. I did not know of his illness until a few months ago, and was making all preparation to visit him when this sad news reached me in my far-off home, on the Pacific coast; but I had this consolation of receiving a sweet little note from his own pen, saying, "Sarah, darling, farewell till we meet at Jesus' feet." Although my heart is wrung with anguish, I feel that we shall meet again.

MRS. S. O. PLACE, San Francisco, Cal.

CONVERSE. At South Manchester, Ct., Oct. 22nd, Deacon Palmer Converse, aged seventy-seven years.

Bro. Converse has long been a servant of the Lord. He was formerly a deacon of the Christian church in Westford, Ct., but when he heard the message, the Lord is coming, in 1842, he identified himself with that people. The blessed hope of the coming of Christ and the resurrection has ever been his theme, and sustained him in his declining years. He was a faithful, consistent follower of Jesus. We heard many say as we stood at the grave, He was a christian. He sleeps in Jesus, waiting the call that will awake the sleeping ones, and clothe the righteous with immortality. His funeral was attended at the Methodist church, Sunday the 24th ult., when we spoke to a large and attentive congregation on the Bible hope for the living and dead.

ABBOT. In Harrison, Me., Oct. 12th, 1875, Sr. Eliza H. Abbott, aged fifty-five years.

Sr. Abbot has stood connected with the Free-will Baptist church for many years, highly esteemed and loved. A few years ago she heard our views on life and death, and the resurrection, which she heartily embraced, and it proved a source of joy and comfort in her last years of poor health. Her death was sudden to all. She leaves a husband, an adopted daughter, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. Words of comfort were spoken to the deeply afflicted ones from 2 Thess. 4: 18. J. WHITMAN.

LUCE. Oct. 25th, 1875, in triumphs of the Advent faith, Hosea Luce, aged seventy-two years, four months, and twenty-four days.

He embraced the Advent faith in 1843. Not more than an hour before he died he said he was happy, and that Christ was blessing him all the time. He prayed much, and often sung one of Zion's songs. He had been sick four months with consumption. He waited patiently for his deliverance that he might sleep in Jesus. He was all ready to go. He was formerly from Chautauque Co., N. Y. D. D. LUCE.

HOLT. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Dover, N. H., Sept. 14th, my beloved sister, Chloe A. Holt, aged fifty-four years, one month and fourteen days.

She was converted under Congregational preaching, when but fifteen years of age, and soon after joined the Free Will Baptist church, of which she remained a member until 1843, when she embraced the Advent views, being at the time in Lowell, Mass. She continued in the Advent doctrine until the day of her death.

ALMIRA O. HOLT.

HARTFORD. In Alton, Sept. 16th, 1875, Ida F. Hartford, daughter of Bro. Seth T. and Betsey J. Hartford, aged sixteen years, eight months, and twenty-five days.

Ida was a good girl, and was beloved by all that knew her. She died in hope of a life to come. She embraced Christ as her Savior in the winter of 1874, was buried with Christ in baptism in May following, and joined the F. W. Baptist church, and has maintained a christian life to the day of her death. N. W. JANES.

EMERY. In West Groton, Vt., Oct. 9th, 1875, Noah Emery, aged eighty-eight years.

The greatest desire of our dear brother was to live to see the Lord come, but he sleeps in Jesus, waiting for the last trump to sound. He leaves a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. Words of comfort spoken by the writer, from Job 14: 10.

GEO. E. BROWN.

BECKWITH. In West Fairlee, Vt., Oct. 29th, 1875, Frankie R., son of Oscar and Rosannah Beckwith, aged eleven years, six months.

Little Frank was one of God's jewels. When upon his death bed he expressed a desire to have Jesus come. Words of comfort were spoken to mourning friends by the writer. M. A. POTTER.

ROPER. In Hubbardston, Mass., Oct. 27th, Kittie A. Roper, daughter of W. M. and Mary A. Roper, aged two years, one month, twelve days.

Words of comfort by the writer, from John 11: 35,—"Jesus wept." H. H. TUCKER.

REV. A. B. EARLE, the evanglist, has been laboring recently with great success at Plattsburg, N. Y. Uuion meetings were held for two weeks, attended by great interest, as we learn from a local paper. So large was the attendance that even on week day evenings there was only one Protestant church in the village, the First Presbyterian, of sufficient capacity to accommodate the audiences. The attention of all classes was very absorbed in the subject, and some business men closed their offices and stores during the hours of service. Nearly all other public gatherings were dispensed with. On Sunday evening, the 17th ult., not less than 250 persons attended an inquiry meeting, and over eighty professed conversion. One liquor dealer, who was converted, poured his liquors into the street.

THERE is in London a "House of Faith" for the reception of boarders and out patients afflicted with diseases supposed to be incurable. Prayer is relied upon for their restoration, but the use of medicine or surgical aid is not prohibited. Its promoters say that "it is founded on the conviction derived from Scripture that the gifts of healing are still exercised in the Christian church where there is faith to receive them."

Work while the Day Lasts.

The Missionary Association formed at Pittsfield Campmeeting, Sept. 9th, 1875, proposed to procure a Tent for Mission work in the Eastern part of Maine, said Tent to be raised in one hundred shares, and not to exceed the sum of four hundred dollars ($400), and all the shares to be taken up by the first day of April, 1876.

The above enterprise has got a good start, and we now ask all our brethren and sisters in or out of the State, who will co-operate with us in Mission work, to send in at once by postal card, or otherwise, saying whether they will take one or more shares in the Tent. Please do not delay an answer, as we wish to order the Tent soon. Direct to Jer. Carr, South Albion, Me.

Important Notice.

As there is much interest generally felt in the establishment of a Campmeeting at Beebe Plains, P. Q., on land now owned by Mr. Anson Beebe, this is to notify all such among the Advent brethren and sisters as are interested in Canada, Northern Vermont, and Northern N. H to meet in the Church at Beebe Plains on Wednesday, Nov 24th, at two o'clock P. M., for the purpose of holding a preliminary business meeting, to take into consideration the following items of business, to wit:

1. To consider the terms on which the grounds can be secured of Mr. Beebe, and see if it is deemed advisable to accept them; and, also, to listen to the proposition of assistance offered by the Passumpsic Railroad Company.

2. If the terms of Mr. Beebe are accepted, to see what method shall be adopted to raise the balance of the money necessary to put the grounds in readiness for the campmeeting, and fix on the time for holding the meeting annually.

3. To consider the propriety of effecting a permanent Campmeeting Association, and if so, to arrange for a Constitution, and appoint the necessary officers, and arrange for the time of the annual meeting of the Association.

4. To appoint a Campmeeting Committee to superintend the arrangements of fitting up the ground, and so on, and hold the first campmeeting.

5. To attend to any other business that may come legitimately before the meeting.

Let there be an earnest effort made to attend this meeting and co-operate in its object. A union on the part of all is desired, and all are invited to come and participate in the arrangements made. All members of the Conference, and all others are invited, so that the interest and work may be the most wide-spread possible. It is supposed that the Campmeeting will be held in the last days of June and first of July, holding over two Sabbaths, next year, closing July 3d. The grove is a splendid one, almost a Paradise. The trees are large sugar maples, with wide-spreading branches, and the ground is smooth, without underbrush, and dry, and the prospects of the success of the enterprise are cheering. Let all be heartily united in this work, and pray for union, and act for it, and the blessing of God will be upon us.

We will say, that to all who attend this preliminary business meeting coming over the Passumpsic R. R., free return passes will be given, as they will be had on all points of the road between Sherbrook and Wells River, and probably over the Southeastern road. Purchase tickets for Stanstead Junction, which is the station at Beebe Plains, and receive return passes there.

The meeting is called by the following brethren in behalf of all interested. For Canada:—L. C. McKinstry and George Jarvis, Danville. John D. Daniels, Richmond. Charles Warren, Berry. John H. Carbee, Hatley. John Elliott, Coaticook. David H. Merrill, Fitch Bay. Geo. W. Bangs, Rock Island. For Northern Vermont:—R. W. Warner and John H. Smith. St. Johnsbury. I. K. Lombard, Burke Hollow. E. W. Wear, Victory. Lewis Bergoine, Salem. For Northern N. H.:—D. N. Chadsey, Colebrook.

Q., commencing Tuesday evening, Dec. 7th, and continuing evenings through the week, and over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters in the vicinity, come and take hold of the work, and labor to save sinners.

Mathews appoint and arrange for the meeting?

MUSINGS.

I. I. LESLIE.

Leave me not out when Thou countest up thy people;
Remember me when thou gatherest thy saints.
In the long hereafter let me see thee clearly;
Through the day eternal, let me be with thee.

Shadows now are 'round me, and I see but dimly;
Clouds above and darkness hide thee from my sight:
Let this night be shortened, let there come thy glory;
Haste the morn that bringeth the unending light.

Many hearts are longing on the earth to see thee;
Daily, nightly, listening for thy chariot's sound;
And a nation waiteth, in the cold dust sleeping—
Waiteth for thee in the silence of the ground.

Leafless trees and withered now the earth presenteth;
Flowers faded, blighted, in each pathway lie;
Howling winds and blasting sweep o'er field and desert;
Clouds and tempests gather in the brightest sky.

On each breeze that cometh over land and ocean,
There are cries and wailings with the battle's roar;
And the dark sea raging, swalloweth up her victims,
Or with anger foaming, casts them on the shore.

Flood and flame are vieing in the fell destruction;
Death and hell are following in the sweeping trail;
And the high are falling, and the low are lying,
Dying here together, with one common wail.

From the mansion towering comes the voice of mourning;
In the cottage lowly there is weeping sore;
And the tomb is opened, and the grave is hollowed;
"Dust to dust" is uttered, and they're seen no more.

Earth is calling for thee—everywhere is calling;
All creation crieth, groaning in its pain:
Come, O great Redeemer! hasten to thy purchased!
All are waiting for thee! come, O come and reign.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear brethren:—"Grace be to you, and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ." It is our privilege as well as duty to comfort and strengthen one another in these last days of peril, right upon the verge of the judgment, while He tarrieth, and mercy waits to bless the perishing multitudes. "Let us who are of the day be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation." Being thus armed, we shall be able to meet the assaults of the enemy, whether it be in our quiet homes, or upon the battle field doing work for God.

Since attending the campmeetings at Springfield, Seabrook, Alton Bay, and Plainville, Ct., at which my soul was much refreshed in the Lord, and my spirit quickened to more earnest and diligent labor in the Master's vineyard, I reached home again, Sept. 18th, feeling truly thankful to God for his loving care over me and mine, and to my dear brethren and sisters for their christian charity and kindness shown while with them, a poor pilgrim and stranger, which I shall ever remember with a grateful heart.

Sept. 19th, Bro. H. L. Stevens and myself began a protracted meeting here, which continued two weeks, the interest steadily rising, and many earnestly inquiring the way of salvation. Only a few of the brethren and sisters were able to attend the meeting regularly, on account of sickness of either themselves or their families. (There has been much sickness in this vicinity this fall). Those who attended, seemed to be impressed with a sense of the nearness of the judgment. At the close of two weeks, we were obliged to leave, to attend to an appointment previouly made, to hold a protracted meeting in Charlotte Co., but as there seemed to be so much interest manifested on the part of those who were seeking Christ, we were loth to close the meetings, but left them in the hands of the brethren who carried them on one week longer. Two persons came out fully on the Lord's side, many were still earnestly crying for mercy, and we trust they may find peace in believing.

The meeting in Charlotte began Oct. 2nd, under the direction of Bro. Stevens, as I could not leave here until Monday, Oct. 4th. On my arrival there, the devil began a sharp contest with us, but God heard the earnest cries of his believing ones, and granted us the victory through his dear name. One man, a ringleader of a party of Close Communionists, who are strongly opposed to us and the truth, and have been doing all in their power to turn the minds of those who are yet weak in the faith, and keep those who would, from believing in the truth, themselves setting such examples before the world, that sinners point to them and say, they are no better than we, came in the church, and, asking us out, told us that the meeting must stop, it should not go on. I told him that we had come to labor for the perishing, and we expected to keep on. This made quite a stir among the sinners, for they are, with but very few exceptions, on our side; but the church began to fast and pray, and many were melted by the power of God to repentance. "When Zion travaileth she shall bring forth." So the Lord blessed our feeble efforts, even in the midst of great opposition, and gave us sixteen souls to make merry over. Praise his dear name! They were about as sound conversions as I ever saw. And the man who had ordered us to stop the meeting, afterwards said that it was the devil who caused him to say what he did. The earnest manner and deep love manifested by the young converts, would remind one of the ancient christians, who feared neither fire nor death for Jesus' sake. A willingness to obey the commands of Christ, is a pretty good test of discipleship. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," says Jesus.

It seemed to be the anxiety of the young converts to be baptized. One young lad said, that before he would miss the opportunity, he would let the clothes, wet with the baptismal waters, dry on him in the sun. Another said that if there was no other way for him to be baptized, he was willing to be put on a pitchfork, and put into the water; yes, he was willing to go through the fire for Jesus' sake. Another wanted the judgment to come immediately, he was so afraid he might do something that would grieve the dear Savior.

After holding the meeting three weeks, during which time there were from twenty-five to forty persons forward for prayers every night, we left the meeting under the direction of Bro. Stevens, as the interest seemed to demand its continuance, and reached home Oct. 2[illegible]th, pretty well worn out. Rested a week, and am now ready for another campaign here, as the interest seems to demand it. We look to Jesus for his blessing, for without it, all our efforts must fail. Pray for us, dear ones, you who have access to the throne of grace, that God may pour out his Spirit, even here among these poor children of color, that many may be caused to magnify his holy name. The truth seems to be cutting its own way rapidly. Jesus is coming soon. We are trying to herald the blessed news far and near. In many localities the nearness of Christ's coming has never been preached; friends tell their friends of the things that they have heard, and thus the interest spreads, and calls come to us from more places than we can supply, with our present mode of traveling—afoot.

In Charlotte Co. the church labors under a difficulty, which causes them considerable trouble. The house in which they worship partly belongs to the opposing paty; and although but a small part belongs to them, and our people have given them the privilege of holding meetings in it half of the time, still they do not seem satisfied that we should have any part at all in the house, which makes the sinners angry, as they gave also to have the house erected. This hinders the work of the Lord, so they have come to the conclusion to put up another house, in which they may worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, without fear of being molested by party owners. They want to commence building about the first of January, if they can get the means to do so.

If any of our brethren or sisters north desire to aid this poor people in building a plain church to worship God in, now is the time. Your aid would be gratefully received, as they have only private houses to hold meetings in, until a house can be built. May the dear Lord direct us in this matter.

The fields are white, ready for the harvest, and my prayer is that God may send forth more earnest laborers into his vineyard, men of God, with hearts full of love for Jesus and perishing souls; such men can find plenty to do, they are greatly needed here. Hobby-riders and church-dividers are plentiful every where. I believe the coming of Jesus, and a preparation to meet him, is the grand truth for this generation. May God help us to sound it every where—"Jesus is coming." Blessed are they who shall be found waiting, and keeping their garments. Brethren, pray for us. Yours in the hope and labor of the gospel.

KANSAS CONFERENCE.

The fourth session of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of Central Kansas convened according to appointment with the church at Arvonia, Oct. 2nd, 1875. The meeting opened by singing an appropriate hymn, after which a portion of Scripture was read from Psalm 19, by Elder Bryan, after which prayer was offered by Bro. Snyder of Franklin Co. The Conference then proceeded to business. The President, Bro. N. S. Bryan, occupying the chair, Brn. V. F. Hunt, D. Webster, and A. McCauley, were chosen a committee on business. The minutes of the last meeting were read and accepted.

A motion was made and carried, that this Conference drop from its territorial bounds Greenwood Co., and substitute in its place Franklin Co. Bro. Snyder gave a good report of the church at Centropolis; they are determined to hold on to the "faith once delivered to the saints." Bro. D. Webster gave an encouraging report of the church at Turkey Creek, and Bro. J. Smith the same of the church at Melvern. Bro. Lapham and wife, and Bro. Rish from Howard Co., came ninety miles to attend this meeting. They gave an encouraging report from this place. The truth is gaining ground. Bro. Hungerford gave us a short report of his labors.

Bro. V. F. Hunt, our District Evangelist, gave a very encouraging report of his labors during the last three months. Has had the pleasure of seeing some turn to the Lord for salvation under his labors during the past few weeks, and has buried eleven souls in the likeness of Christ's death, and raised them up in the likeness of his resurrection, to walk in newness of life. Brn. D. Webster, A. Preston, N. S. Bryan and J. Smith gave a short report of their labors during the past three months. Bro. V. F. Hunt was chosen District Evangelist for the next three months. Brn. V. F. Hunt, A. Preston, and N. S. Bryan, gave us some stirring discourses during the meeting, and one came out on the Lord's side, and two went forward in baptism. We enjoyed a good time in the Lord, and a foretaste of the good time coming, when, if faithful, we shall help swell redemption's song in a better world than this.

On motion, Conference adjourned to meet with the church at Centropolis, Franklin Co., Saturday, Jan. 1st, 1876, at 2 o'clock P. M.

Arvonia, Kan., Oct. 2nd.

MY EXPERIENCE.

A. H. SMITH.

We old pilgrims that came out of Egypt thirty years ago, and have come up through the Red Sea, as Bro. Munger says, and have been in the wilderness ever since, have had an experience that those born by the way know little about. When I, with my companion, first heard the glad sound, Behold, He cometh! we felt no opposition rise up in our hearts. It was a certain joyful sound, and was so in harmony with our feelings that we took our lamps and went out to hear and learn the reason why such a proclamation should be made at this time; and when we saw the visions of Daniel and John made plain upon tables, with the different lines of prophecy leading down, and terminating at the same point, and the mighty power of God resting down upon preacher and people, we said, Surely the history of this world is told; the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and the same Jesus we had learned to love, would soon be here in all his glory, and as the light came pouring in upon the restitution, and the saints' inheritance, and reign of Christ upon the earth, the scales began to fall from our eyes, as we caught the first glimpse of the great plan of redemption, and God's purposes concerning the earth and the human race.

When we received these great truths down deep into our hearts, and appropriated them by faith, there was a sanctifying power went through our entire being, which spoiled us forever for the world, and all that the world takes pleasure in. Old things passed away, and all things became new, Bible and all. Our hearts were filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Then came the tug of war. The devil, being raving mad, began to whistle up his war dogs to bark at us, and vex us in every conceivable way. It was no uncommon thing in those days to go out from meeting at the midnight hour, and find our horses sheared, harness cut, linchpins, and sometimes wheels gone; but we would cast about and fix up, and tie up, and right up, and then start for our mountain home, some five or ten miles away, as the case might be, taking joyfully the spoiling of our goods, knowing in ourselves that we had in heaven a better and more enduring substance.

On reaching home in the small hours of the night, we would find the serpent's trail all about; pigs in the garden, cattle in the apples or corn, woodchuck in the well, milk pail tied to a cow's tail, and the gate labelled "gone up."

Now, does anybody suppose the devil would have acted like that, unless we had learned some great truth which was very important for us to know, in order to be in harmony with God's plans and purposes, and be found in a waiting, watching position, when the Lord should come? We think not.

But after all this, as we turn to the chart, we see that no strange thing happened to us. It is the same road the fathers have trod. It is the way of the cross, that has now led us down to the great battle grounds, near the bank of the river, where we are in waiting for the Captain of our salvation to come and ferry us over on to the immortal shore; and here we expect to wait, and watch, and pray,

"Till Christ's triumphal car we meet,
And see a better day."

The Bible is full of promises to those that wait for God. Then let us wait on, and work on. Soon the shout will go up, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him; we will be glad, and rejoice in his salvation."

Wolcott, Ct., Oct. 18th, 1875.

A WORD TO THE WEARY.

R. S. CRAIG.

"What is Jesus to me?" was the thoughtless answer of one whom I urged to accept Jesus. As I passed on through the busy thoroughfare, this answer revolved itself into many thoughts; and as I realize what Jesus is to me, I feel like exclaiming from the depths of my soul, Oh, poor sinner, would that you knew what Jesus is to you. Would that you could now see the glory that Jesus offers you, when he says, "Come unto me."

Again, I meet one who professes to be Christ's. Prosperity is smiling upon her. The bloom of health is upon her cheek. She knows not want or sorrow. Let me ask you, sister, What is Jesus to you?

"Oh, I gave myself to him years ago. He is my Savior. Ten years I have belonged to the church. I have no desire to leave it."

"But do you feel him inexpressibly near and precious to your heart?"

"Certainly, my friend; but my time is precious. I must hasten on."

One year had passed, and we meet again. "My sister, what are your prospects for the kingdom? is your title clear?"

"Ah! Mrs. C., "I have had severe trials since I saw you last. My health and prosperity have both failed, and all seems dark within and without."

"Well, have you not accepted Jesus as your burden bearer? Are you trying to bear the load that Jesus has promised to bear for you?"

"Oh, I try to trust Jesus, but my faith is so weak."

"Then you have not accepted Jesus?"

"Oh, yes, I hope I am a christian, but all is so dark now. I cannot realize that he accepts me."

Does his word not say, "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out"? Also, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee"? And again, in terms more touching still, he compares his love and watch-care to the mother's o'er her nursing child, and in language that should reassure every trembling heart, he says, "I will never forget thee."

Oh, weak, trembling, wavering christian, look up and rejoice; smile through your tears, though your trials be severe. Remember this, that while the storm-clouds of sorrow may sweep over you, you may hear amid the din that gentle voice saying, "I will never forget thee."

What is Jesus to you? He says, "I go to prepare a place for you." He knows your poverty; that you are only a pilgrim and a stranger, buffeted upon this side and that, by the cold and heartless world; but "be not dismayed," "I have overcome the world." "If ye abide in me," ye shall never be confounded. Stand the storm a little longer, for "I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Until I come, "my grace shall be sufficient for you." And "if any man sin," I will stand between him and the Father; for I have given myself as a propitiation for your sins, and they shall be remembered no more against you forever.

Is it not enough, beloved brethren and sisters, to have a Savior like this? We can lay before him no sorrow that he is unacquainted with; for he was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," tempted "in all points . . . like as we are." Shall we murmur any more at the old tenement house? for soon our mansion will be complete; for "behold [our Jesus says], I come quickly; and my reward is with me." Even so, our longing hearts exclaim, Come, O come!

Philadelphia, Pa.

PRAY FOR ONE ANOTHER.

C. MENDENHALL.

The injunction to pray for one another should at all times be heeded, but more especially now.

We are living in perilous times. Dangers are thickening on every hand, temptations are increasing in power. Sin in all its varied hues is adapting itself to every individual's particular weakness. The outlook from a temporal stand-point is truly dark, hence we would reiterate the apostolic injunction—to "pray for one another."

Mark you, reader, we did not say—criticize one another, scold one another, quarrel, fight, trample upon one another, but "pray for one another."

Brethren, pray for me. Let us pray for those who are God's children, pray for those who preach "the word," pray for those who hear it, pray for each other. Pray at home and abroad, at the family altar, at the church, and, above all, in the closet.

Pray without ceasing. Soon prayer will end and praise begin. Soon time will end and eternity be ours. Centuries, years, months, days, and hours are lost here. Eternity, who can measure its height, depth, length, breadth? Only the Infinite mind can conceive of it in its fulness, but it is yours, if you are Christ's, yours to be full of joy, bliss, and peace.

Yes, brethren, pray for one another that we may all be there. Pastor, pray for the people; people, pray for the pastor. Pray that we may enter into that rest. Finally, fellow pilgrims, "pray for one another."

ONE TEXT.

P. W. HOUGH.

"Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."—PSA. 19: 2.

I am cheered and comforted with this text almost every morning. In being made conscious at the return of day, after having been unconscious during all my sleeping hours, is a wonderful confirmation of this text, and opens up to the mind of the thoughtful christian many pleasing and profitable channels of heavenly meditations on the wisdom and goodness of our Creator in his manifold arrangements to meet the demands of our physical and mental nature. God has ordained the day for labor, but the night for rest, or sleep; and so perfect is our unconsciousness in sound sleep, that it has been chosen by the Holy Spirit to represent our state in death, called sleep, and our resurrection, our rising up or awakening. Thus "day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."

What a door of knowledge is open to us each morning when our consciousness is restored to us; an every day evidence of God's love to his creatures, and his wonderful works to the children of men.

I would recommend this text to all the saints at their first rising. It will give us encouragement to hope to the end even for Him who is "the resurrection and the life," when we shall see Him as he is and be made like him. Amen.

SIGNS OF A DYING OR DECAYING CHRISTIAN.

1. When you are so indifferent to assemble or frequent the church of God, that you can come, or you can not come, at your own pleasure.
2. When in your most solemn worship, you are quickly weary without warrantable cause.
3. When few sermons will please you; either you like not matter, or manner, or man, or place.
4. When you think you know enough.
5. When a small occasion will keep you from Christ's table, or communion with the church of God.
6. When you have usually no great mind to prayer.
7. When reading the Holy Scriptures is more burdensome than delightful.
8. When you are mighty inquisitive after novelties, or new things, rather than wholesome doctrine.
9. When you are so little prepared for the solemn assemblies, that they come before you think of them, or long for them.
10. When you go to the assembly more for fear of the brethren's eye than Christ's omniscient and all-piercing eye.
11. When you had rather betray the name of Christ Jesus and the credit of the gospel by your silence, than appear for it to your own suffering and disparagement.
12. When, at a small offense, you are usually so impatient that you commit great sin.
13. When you are more careful to get the words of Christ's people than the spirit of Christ's people—the form than the power.
14. When you are not much troubled at your own miscarriages, while they are kept from public view.
15. When you love least those christians that deal most faithfully with you in the opening of your faults, and tendering you remedies.
16. When you pray more for afflictions to be removed than sanctified.
17. When under God's calamity you can neither find necessity nor excellence to humble yourself by fasting and prayer.
18. When the thoughts of your bosom—lust, or any other sin—are more prevalent with you than pleasing God.
19. When you are mighty curious about the lesser matter of God's law, and mighty careless about the weightier.
20. When the Holy Spirit's help to the great work of mortification seems not of absolute necessity to you.
21. When you are so ignorant of your spiritual standing, that you know not whether you grow or decay.
22. When increase of time in Christ's acquaintance worketh decrease of affection to Christ's company.
23. When great sins seem small, and small sins seem none at at all.
24. When your tongue is frequent in complaining of lesser miseries, and silent in praising for greater mercies.
25. When your sense of the great worth of time is so small, that you are prodigal.
25. When a watchful care for a godly life and christian conversation is more accidental than habitual.
27. When care for your body is usually most pleasant, and care for your soul usually most irksome.
28. When you are much a stranger to the practical part of meditation on the word and the works of God.
29. When the thoughts of a dying Jesus for your sins doth little dissuade you from an unchristian conversation.
30. When you can remember past sins committed rather with liking than loathing.
31. When you can see spectacles of mortality carried to their long home, and be as practically unconcerned as though yourselves were exempted from the like state of mortality.
32. When you find greater satisfaction in the company of the world than with the people of God.—Selected by B.

HE COMES NOT.

For Sr. C. A. Allen, Saco, Me.

J. ALBERT LIBBY.

I open the door for his coming,
I list for the sound of his feet;
In vain, all in vain, for he comes not,
The waiting and lonely to meet.

I gather the group at the table,
One place has a vacant chair;
And my tears gush afresh as I view it,
Reflecting that he is not there.

My pillow oft smothers my sighing,
As I think of his bed in the dust;
I cannot get weaned from my crying,
I mourn his departure, and must.

A shadow has dropped on my pathway,
So dark and far-reaching, I know,
No earth-light can ever dispel it,
I must find it wherever I go.

Yet I bow to the rod in submission,
While I look up to God and believe,
He heareth my every petition,
And knoweth how deeply I grieve.

And yonder a gleam of the morning,
Low down the horizon I see;
'Tis the morn of release for my dead ones,
So the morning of gladness for me.

But it seemeth still long till the daybreak,
And time far too slow in its pace.
If now the dear Lord from the heavens
Would but cast down the beams of his face,

I would joy from my heart to behold him,
For his own sake, my Savior divine,
And Mary-like haste to enfold him,
For his coming will bring me back mine.

West Poland, Me.

A LATELY DISCOVERED PARABLE.

Then shall the kingdom of Satan be likened to a grain of tobacco seed; which, though exceedingly small, being cast into the earth, grew, and became a great plant, and spread its leaves rank and broad, so that hugs and vile worms found a habitation thereon. And it came to pass, in the course of time, that the sons of men looked upon it, and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So they put forth their hands, and did chew thereof, and some it made sick, and others to vomit it most filthily.

And it further came to pass, that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said, We cannot cease from chewing it. And the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul, and they were seized with a violent spitting, and they did spit even in ladies's parlors, and in the house of the Lord of hosts; and the saints of the Host High were greatly displeased thereby. And it came to pass that in the course of time that others did snuff it, and they were taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze, insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly. And yet others cunningly wrought the leaves thereof into rolls, and did set fire to one end thereof, and they did look exceedingly grave and calf-like, and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever. And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business in the earth. Merchantmen waxed rich by the commerce thereof.

And it came to pass, that the saints of the Most High defiled themselves with it; even the poor, who could not buy bread, nor shoes, nor books for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith, and said, Wherefore this waste? and why do these little ones lack bread, and shoes, and books? Turn now your fields into corn and wheat, and put this evil from you, and I will bless you, and cause my face to shine upon you. But with one accord they all exclaimed, We cannot cease from chewing, puffing, and snuffing. We are slaves. And the Lord was sore displeased with his people, who raised this plant on the Connecticut, and cried, "Repent, or I will come and curse your lands with a sore curse."—Selected by Arthur Pease.

ANOTHER DIP.

Poor Dick, a slave, had long prayed for his ungodly master, who had sold his wife away. He did want to see her again, but he could see no hope for it unless God laid his hand upon the master, and shook the devil out of him, and made him a "new creature" in Christ; then he would see different and act different. Of course Dick's heart was made glad to hear that in a revival meeting that was being held in the vicinity, his master was converted. He sought his master early and found from his own lips the report was true.

"An' now, master," he exclaimed, "Dick is a free boy, 'aint he? an' can go and see his wife?"

"No, no! Dick," he replied, "you must be a good boy, and stay on the plantation same as ever."

"Ah! master," Dick cried out, "you want another dip."

Next evening the master was at the revival meeting, taking part and rejoicing among the converts. Dick upon hearing of this went to him, asking if Dick was a free boy now? The man replied as before, to which Dick again cried,

"Ah! master, you want another dip!"

As the people were wending their way home after the next meeting, a familiar voice was heard by Dick, shouting "Glory!" He recognized it as the voice of his master. Quickly over the field he ran, and as he came to the road, his master caught sight of him, and exclaimed, as he took his hand,

"Yes, Bro. Dick, you can go and see your wife when you want to,—you're a free boy now."

"Glory be to God!" cried the sable saint. "Master, you did get that other dip, didn't you?"

People may call it sanctification, or by whatever name they choose, but what the church of God needs is "another dip."—Com. by Arthur A. Waite.

FAMILY TROUBLES.

Among all the fooleries of the present day, none are more marked than the matrimonial infelicities that so curse the world. People who are miserable when they are apart, think they will be happy when they are together; and then finding themselves miserable when together, they will be happy if they can only get apart. The fact is, the devil is in them, and they are miserable anywhere, whether single, married, or divorced. And the most of the misery they enjoy is the fruit of their own faults or follies. Good husbands make good wives, and any man who regards his wife as his inferior, or boasts of his superiority over her, will do well to remember that he showed something of the extent of his wit in picking out a fool for a wife, while wives making the same complaints may participate in the same consolation.

"Trouble in the family!" Well, who does not have trouble in the family? Do not all people have troubles, trials, and vexings, and temptations, and faults to deal with? But is that any reason why people should make fools of themselves, and quarrel, and separate, and spread scandal and discord on every hand? We all have troubles; let us bear them with patience and love, and let us remember that in married life as everywhere else, we are to overcome evil with good, and conquer all difficulties in the spirit of christian fidelity and tenderness.

A gentleman who did not live very happily with his wife decided to procure a divorce, and took advice on the subject from an intimate friend, a man in high social standing. "Go home and court your wife," said the wise adviser, "and then tell me the result." They bowed in prayer and separated. When another year had passed away, the once complaining husband came again to see his friend, and said: "I have called to thank you for the good advice you gave me, and to tell you that we are as happy as when we were first married. I cannot be grateful enough for your good counsel." "I am glad to hear it, dear sir," said the other, "I hope you will continue to court your wife as long as you live."

A fortnight of honest, careful, loving effort on the part of husband or wife, would heal nine-tenths of the family broils and sad troubles that curse the world to-day; and if both would join in the endeavor, they could, as a rule, settle their difficulties in fifteen minutes, and be at peace among themselves as long as they live.—The Chistian.

DON'T BE TOO CRITICAL.—Whatever you do, never set up for a critic. We don't mean a newspaper one, but in private life, in the domestic circle, in society. It will not do any one any good, and it will do you harm,—if you mind being called disagreeable. If you don't like any one's nose, or object to any one's chin, don't put your feelings into words. If any one's manners don't please you, remember your own. People are not all made to suit one taste; recollect that. Take things as you find them, unless you can alter them. Even a dinner, after it is swallowed, cannot be made any better. Continual fault-finding, continual criticism of the speech of this one, and the conduct of that one, the dress of one and the opinions of the other, will make home the unhappiest place under the sun. If you are never pleased with any one, no one will ever be pleased with you. And if it is known that you are hard to suit, few will take pains to suit you.—Wayside.

A BAD FAMILY.

"Now, why can't you leave out cider, and then I'd sign the pledge; what is the use of making such a fuss about a little apple-juice?" said Mrs. Brown to Mrs. Manville, who was trying to persuade her to sign the temperance pledge. "Sweet cider is as harmless as milk."

"It only stays sweet a few hours," answered Mrs. Manville. "It spoils so soon that the only safe way is to let it entirely alone. A reformed man said, in my hearing, 'There's as big a devil in the cider-barrel as in the whisky-barrel,' and I believe it is true."

"Pshaw! who ever heard of cider hurting any one?"

"I have," answered Mrs. Manville. "Look at Mr. Edwin's family. He puts twenty barrels of cider into his cellar for his family's use yearly. His sons are drunkards, and his daughters married drunkards. Then there is Mr. Conrad. He was once as fine a young man as there was in the country. He married a lovely girl and has pretty children; but cider ruined him. He has been expelled from church, and he is a poor wreck, morally and physically. Then there is Mrs. Dr. Yost. There was not a prettier girl in the country than Emma Hayden, but her husband prescribed stimulants when she was in poor health, and now she is an habitual drunkard. The cellar must be kept locked to keep her from the cider-barrel; and it is not safe to keep sour cider enough in the house to make vinegar, for she will drink it if she can get it."

"You make a pretty strong case, Mrs. Manville," answered Mrs. Brown. "Yet what you say is true. I had never thought of it before, however. If cider is so dangerous an ememy as that, I may as well sign the pledge." And she took the pen and wrote her name.

"Mine too, mamma," and "mine too," said little Jack and Bessie, who were so busy with their play that no one supposed them to be listening.

"We want to do as mamma does," said the little ones.

"Yes," said Mrs. Manville, "and cider belongs to the old alcohol family, which commits more murders yearly than all the other murderers in the world. It is a bad family, children. Let us have nothing to do with it."—Temperance Banner.

CHANNELS FOR LOVE.

Make channels for the streams of love,
Where they may broadly run;
And love has overflowing streams
To fill them every one.

But if at any time we cease
Such channels to provide,
The very founts of love for us
Will soon be parched and dried.

For we must share, if we would keep
That blessing from above;
Ceasing to give, we cease to have—
Such is the law of love.

HOW LONG AND HOW MANY.

How long do you think it took to write the Bible? Fifteen hundred years. From Moses, who wrote Genesis, to St. John, who wrote Revelation, it was that long, long time.

How many people helped to write it? There were Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, and Peter. There were Moses and Ezra and David and Daniel and Samuel. Some were shepherds, some fishermen, some farmers, some fishermen, some tent-makers, some kings, some judges, some princes; some were learned, some were unlearned; and yet they all agree in what they write. There is not so much as a word of disagreement in the whole book. How could that be? Because God did all the thinking in the Bible. The thoughts in the Bible are all God's thoughts. Those thirty men only did the writing. They wrote just what God told them.

How many different sections or books are there in the Bible? Sixty-six, all bound together, making one beautiful whole. It is a blessed book. Prize it above all the books in the wide, wide world. Make it the man of your counsel and the guide of your life. Your life can never be a failure, if you follow its instructions.—Well-Spring.

THE FAITHFUL WORD.

A gentleman was waiting for the proprietor of a mill to come in, near where two workmen were busy. One of them could not speak a sentence without uttering one or more of the most fearful oaths. The other workman at last said:

"Be careful how you speak; there is a stranger here."

"Yes," said the gentleman waiting, "but I had rather be a stranger to every one in the world, than to the Lord Jesus Christ, whose name you are using so irreverently."

Both were silent, and not another oath was uttered while the gentleman was in hearing. Only the "harvest time" shall tell whether those words were sown in "good ground;" but at least the Master was not dishonored in the presence of one of his professing children.

PLAIN DIET FOR CHILDREN.

This is what children ought on every account to be accustomed to from the first; it is vastly more for their present health and comfort than little nice things with which fond parents are so often apt to vitiate their appetites, and it will save them a great deal of mortification in after-life. If you make it a point to give them the best of everything, to pamper with rich cakes, sweetmeats, and sugar-plums; if you allow them to say with a scowl, "I don't like this, or that," "I can't eat that," and then go away and make them a little toast, or kill a chicken for their dainty palates, depend upon it you are doing a great injury, not only on the score of denying a full muscle and rosy cheek, but of forming one of the most inconvenient habits that they can carry along with them in after-life. When they come to leave you they will not half the time find anything they can eat, and thus you will prepare them to go chafing and grumbling through life, the veriest slaves almost in the world.

Mothers, listen and be warned in time, for the time will come when you will repent; seeing your sons and daughters make their homes miserable by complaint, and raising their children up in the same way.

Nor is this the worst of it. A pampered appetite seeks stimulants, condiments, and other substances which are not food, and this results in dissipation. Oatmeal, rice, wheat meal, barley, corn meal—not starch—with milk, and an endless variety of fruits, and the best vegetables, are the best for children.—Science of Health.

A LAZY dyspeptic was bewailing his own misfortunes, and speaking with a friend on the latter's hearty appearance. "What do you do to make yourself so strong and healthy?" inquired the dyspeptic. "Live on fruit alone." "What kind of fruit?" "The fruit of industry; and I am never troubled with indigestion."

BURDENED.

ADA POMEROY.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee."—Psalm 55: 22.

When weary and faint, and burdened with care,
The soul of the saint finds comfort in prayer;
When by sin we're oppressed, and our faith has grown dim,
In prayer we may carry our burdens to Him.

Environed by sin, and burdened with care,
At times our temptations are grievous to bear;
Here through sin we're condemned, but we find mercy there,
The moment our faith seeks our Father in prayer.

His strength is sufficient, his promise is sure,
His Word and his love will ever endure;
Though often we leave him, and wander at will,
He leaveth us not; he loveth us still.

He remembers our frame, he knows we are dust,
But through him we shall conquer, if in him we trust;
Not alone are we called with temptation to bear,
For he will go with us, our trials to share.

When afflicted and grieved, and tempted by sin,
How consoling the thought of Christ dwelling within;
His presence exalts us, his power will save;
And through him we may conquer e'en death and the grave.

On the arm of our Savior our burdens we've laid,
Nought can molest us, nought make afraid;
Infinite love, and protection, and care,
Are ours when we seek it, in faith and by prayer.

GOD A PERSONAL BEING.

D. K. BARRETT, JR.

There are many who reject the idea of God's personality, claiming that it is degrading the Divine Being to think of him as having form and parts. It is difficult to see how they can conceive of him as a being at all, without these, yet some claim to regard God as a being, yet having no person, or form, being of an invisible nature. If he has no form, or substance, of course he cannot be seen.

Others regard God as simply an animating principle, permeating every thing, equally present every where, and in every thing,—the God of nature. However much such ideas of God may please some, and draw forth their adoration, they are inconsistent with the Scripture revelation of God, the Lord, who made the heavens and the earth, and all that in them is.

But first, let me ask, Is it true that having a form and parts degrades, or lessens the estimate in which men generally hold persons or things? Is not beauty, comeliness, and majesty in form and person, something which calls forth our admiration, when we see it in man? Do we not, even in this fallen state of humanity, sometimes see persons of great stateliness and majesty of form and bearing, giving us a degree of awe and admiration in their presence, especially when we know them to possess noble characters, partaking of the divine nature? What glory must then crown the redeemed, and angels! We shall have our vile bodies, that are now under the curse in man's fallen state, changed and fashioned "like unto Christ's glorious body." This Jesus was "the express image" of his Father's "person." Heb. 1: 3. Herein the personality of God is established.

Form, too, is seen to call out adoration, if only it be glorious and majestic. Is anything beautiful? It has form, and is visible. True there is beauty and sublimity in sound, but did you ever know it to be produced from anything so unsubstantial as not to be capable of coming in contact with the material air, so as to set it in motion?

We are told the spirit, the proper man, is immaterial, and cannot come in contact with matter. Is God such a spirit? The Scriptures do not so reveal him. Let us abide by what they teach us. God is first brought to our notice in the work of creation. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form and void." Will God leave it so, or degrade (?) it by giving it form, and beautifying it? He fits it up for living inhabitants, lights it, arranges day and night, causes vegetation to grow, and brings into being living creatures, in sea and on land, of every description beneath man. Then he begins to take counsel with himself, as it were, saying, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." When he did this, what did he do? "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground"; and formed or made him in his own image. Can it be that those believing God has no form get it from the Bible? They must find something to controvert Moses then. Christ taught us to believe Moses, and the prophets, and said if they did not believe them, neither would they believe him.

To avoid the most natural meaning of this text in Gen. 1: 26, various opinions have been given as to what the image refers. Some say the dominion given him was that in which the image consisted; thus giving him rule, as God has rule, and so making him like God. (See Hist. of the Bible, vol. 1, p. 48, by G. R. Gleig.) There might be a likeness in this, but hardly an image. Then, too, notice this is given, or proposed, in addition to the image and likeness. Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion. . . . So God created man in his own image. . . . And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea," etc. Gen. 1: 26–28.

Others say this "image" refers to man's original moral likeness to God. Not to stop to discuss how much like God man was in this respect originally, it must be confessed he does not retain that resemblance. But we read in one of Paul's letters (1 Cor. 11: 7), he "is the image and glory of God." God said to Noah, when he came out of the ark, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made he man." Here respect is paid to that image, hence man had not fully lost it. It must in this connection refer to the physical man. A moral image is something inconceivable.

Some say, it was immortality. That is one of God's attributes. If attributes are an image, why single out one? On the same ground, might we not claim all,—omnipotence, omnipresence, and all wisdom, etc.? But we know we have not these, or immortality either, by nature. For we are told to "seek for . . . immortality." And, too, we are called mortal man. We will state no more opinions, as the truth seems plain.

Image is properly used concerning something which has form. "Image—similitude of any person or thing; a likeness; an effigy. 2. An idol. 3. Semblance, appearance. 4. Representation of anything to the mind."—Webster. "Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image." Gen. 5: 3. We often hear a person spoken of as the image of his father. We have no difficulty in understanding what is meant. Images were made of wood, stone, gold, etc., and worshiped as gods. Ex. 20: 4—"Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in the heaven above, or in the earth beneath." Ps. 73: 20—When thou awakest thou shalt despise their image." Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream "a great image." Dan. 2: 31. In Rev. 13: 14, it speaks of making an image of the beast. These texts show us the use of the term image.

Man is fallen, and is a mere earthly image of God. Man is not the noble creature he was when first created, or that he will be in the restitution. "We have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (Christ). 1 Cor. 15: 49. "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." 1 Cor. 15: 45. Thus Christ was in one sense a spirit, though a bodily person. So God is a spirit, i. e., a spiritual being, even as Christ was, and as we shall be in the resurrection.

"God is love," but he is something more than just love. "God is a consuming fire," but that does not describe his nature altogether. "God is a spirit," but has a person, of which Christ is "the express image." Heb. 1: 3. Christ is called the image of God also in 2 Cor. 4: 4, Col. 1: 15. Christ is the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth; and we should expect they would look some alke. John 1: 14, 3: 11.

Second. The Scriptures everywhere allude to God as a personal being. They speak of his face: "Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live." Ex. 33: 20. Here, you see, is majesty; here is grandeur of person, hands, and back parts. "And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by; and I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my back parts; but my face shall not be seen." Ex. 33: 21–23.

And eyes, too, hath God, yea, that are all-seeing. "He that formed the eye, shall he not see?" "For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in behalf of those whose heart is perfect toward him." 2 Chron. 16: 9. "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." Prov. 15: 3.

And hath God ears to hear? "He that formed the ear, shall he not hear?" "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ear is open to their cry."

God can talk, and does. "With him [Moses] will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches." Num. 12: 8. "And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire; ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude." Deut. 4: 12. Great was the majesty of God as he appeared on Mt. Sinai. The people feared greatly, and prayed that the word might not thus be spoken unto them any more. They say, "Behold the Lord our God hath showed us his glory, and his greatness, and we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire." Deut. 5: 24. Paul, speaking of it, says—"Whose voice then shook the earth." Heb. 12: 26.

We have an almighty, personal, and real God, clothed with glory, majesty, and honor. Let us rejoice that our God is something more than a mere principle in nature. He is most wonderful and incomprehensible in his greatness, his love, his goodness, his wisdom, and in all his attributes adorable to behold; yea, "the perfection of beauty." "In his presence there is fulness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore." But he cannot be found out to perfection.

Third. We have the promise of coming into his presence by and by. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Matt. 5: 8. "They shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads." Rev. 22: 4. How glorious, how bright is the prospect of the child of God! These vile bodies shall be changed, and "fashioned like unto his [Christ's] glorious body," and our eyes shall behold "the King in his beauty." Let us not deny man was made in the "image of God," nor that God has form, parts, and faculties. True, his thoughts are higher than our thoughts as the heavens are higher than the earth. Our eye can see but a little way; God's is all-seeing. Our voices are very weak, and can be heard at but a little distance; God's can shake the earth. Our ear is dull of hearing; God's is not. The faintest petition of his children is heard.

Our understanding is so limited, we can hear and contemplate but one thing at a time; God is not thus limited. You cannot speak an unkind word to wife, children, neighbor, or any one, but, lo, it is heard in heaven by the great God thy Maker, who will call thee to account; for he has said, "For thy words shalt thou be justified, and for thy words shalt thou be condemned." Yes, God understands the hearts of all his creatures; their thoughts are understood afar off. The arm of our power is short; we are weak; but God is Almighty. His arm is not shortened that it cannot save.

O sinner, humble yourself under the mighty hand of God, and he will exalt you in due time. But he will not give you eternal life in which to curse him. He is worthy of your honor and love. But if you will not render it to him willingly, he will not compel you; but if you will not come unto him that you might have life, you will be "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power." 2 Thess. 1: 9. For he will yet have a clean universe. "Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Ps. 37: 10. Brethren, our mission is from this God. If he be for us, who can be against us? Walk softly before him, humbly, faithfully, confidently. Our redemption is near.

HUMAN FRAILTIES AND DIVINE PERFECTION.

The experiences of the righteous in past ages have presented to the human mind a series of apparent incongruities. At one time they have seemed to be on Pisgah's mount viewing by the telescope of faith, the heavenly land, and at other times down in the valley of sorrow and affliction, and tempted to ask with David of old, "Why has the Lord forsaken us?"

Job, while in prosperity, could rejoice that God had blest him with such an abundance, but when in adversity could "curse the day he was born."

Moses, while viewing the promises of God, could choose to suffer affliction with his people, rather than to have been placed upon the throne of Egypt; but when he was tried by the murmurings of the Hebrews, could desire his name to be blotted out of the book of God."

Noah condemned the world by his faith in a coming flood, and preached righteousness for one hundred and twenty years, and saw the antideluvians laid out in the winding sheet of death, but afterwards fell into drunkenness.

Even Abraham, "the father of the faithful," after being called of God to go into "a land which he should after receive for an inheritance," was tempted, and represented to Pharaoh of Egypt that Sarah was his sister instead of his wife.

Elijah, "a man subject to like passions as we are," says James, could at one time shut the windows of heaven by his faith, "that it rain not for three years and six months;" and again, could call fire from heaven to consume sacrifice, altar and all, and destroy the prophets of Baal, was left to feel his weakness, and sat down under a "juniper tree," and desired death, and afterward crept into a "cave," showing a fear of that miserable Jezebel.

Jeremiah, "sanctified and ordained of God before his birth," and whose mouth "was touched by the hand of God," and was "set over the nations, and over the kingdoms," to root out and pull down, to build and to plant, was brought to such a trial in waiting for the fulfillment of "the word of the Lord" he had uttered in the ears of that rebellious people, cried out, "O Lord! thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived. I will not make mention of him nor speak any more in his name. Cursed be the day when I was born." See Jer. 20: 7–18.

Jonah, after his wonderful experience preaching to the Ninevites, not seeing the word of the Lord fulfilled according to his idea, became angry, and called on God to take his life.

Peter, one of the chosen apostles of our Lord, who manifested such a love for his Master as to feel willing "to go to prison or to death" with him, was left to be "sifted as wheat" by Satan, and cursed and denied Jesus, even before a "maid" in the palace of the high priest.

John, the Baptist, who came in "the spirit and power of Elijah" as the forerunner of Christ, and proclaimed boldly that he was "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord," and had baptized the sacred Jesus in Jordan, and saw the wonderful display of approval on the occasion, began to doubt when cast into prison, and even sent two of his disciples to inquire if he was "the Christ," or should we "look for another?"

Our space forbids us to speak of the seeming incongruities of many other prominent Bible characters, who, when they stood boldly for God, "by faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises" etc., but in an evil hour gave way to temptation, and was "shorn of their strength." The Holy Spirit moved upon the prophets to write the biographies of men just as they were, with faults, and not as many are written in our day, when character is extolled far beyond what facts will warrant.

But there was one personage upon earth whose character was spotless. The Lord Jesus Christ was his name. His coming had been predicted hundreds, yea, thousands of years prior. Isaiah, in speaking of this person, said, "His name shall be called Wonderful." A wonder is something strange, a miracle, a marvel, a prodigy. All this was true connected with the life of Jesus. He had a wonderful birth, and a wonderful lifetime filled with wonderful events, so that the multitudes, chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things he did, and the effect was wonderful, for babes and sucklings cried in the temple, saying, "Hosanna to the son of David."

He had a wonderful temptation, that he might succor those who are tempted, and make a way of escape for them.

He had a wonderful death, attended with wonderful phenomena, for the sun refused to shine, and a mighty earthquake opened the graves of saints.

He had a wonderful resurrection, for an angel came down from heaven, and rolled the stone away from Joseph's tomb, and the wonderful conqueror came forth with the keys of death and the grave, and "showed himself by many infallible proofs to his disciples for the space of forty days, and then ascended into heaven wonderfully, and "led a multitude of captives;" and the wonderful news was brought to those gazing ones, by the angels, that this "same Jesus" should come in "like manner" as they had seen him "go into heaven."

But the greatest wonder of all appears in the fact that he came to seek and save lost, perishing humanity; and, though we are beset with so many apparent weaknesses and temptations, can deliver us, and restore to us the "joys of his salvation," and finally save us in the everlasting kingdom.—Ex.

THE GOSPEL.

M. JANE LOCKE.

The gospel is the power of God. God says his word shall not return unto him void, but it shall accomplish that for which he sent it. The design of the gospel is to save the perishing. A gospel that has no power in it to save lost men must be a gospel that leaves out Jesus Christ, for he came to seek and to save that which was lost. He came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. Paul says in writing to the Corinthians, "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and of power, that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

The word of God, which is quick and powerful, needs no polishing, no rectifying, no adulterating, no fixing up with enticing words of man's wisdom. The popular gospel of these last days leaves out the power, while it lulls to sleep its hearers with the song of peace and safety; leaves out the old-fashioned brotherhood, by which Christ's own dear children were so unmistakably known as a peculiar people. No wonder that the humble followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, the old-fashioned christians, feel very much out of place in a congregation of fashionable worshipers. But praise the name of the Lord, there is a power in the gospel. We have this treasure in earthern vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. Praise God for the pure word of life, and for the power of inspiration, which accompanies that word to the hearts of the believers.

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to my poor soul. By this power I have obtained the unsearchable riches of Christ, and am able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge. By the power of the gospel I am quickened, who was dead in trespasses and sins; and can walk in the light, as he is in the light, and have fellowship with God's people, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth me from all sin.

The power of the gospel enables me to look forward with full assurance of faith, to a blessed immortality in the resurrection state, in the world to come, for life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel. By patient continuance in well doing, I am seeking for glory, and honor, and immortality, expecting eternal life wnen Jesus comes.

Loudon, N. H.

THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

In the epistle to the Romans, St. Paul used this expression twice in the Greek. It indicates more than justification by faith, the great doctrine which is set forth and defended in that epistle. It shows that true obedience springs from faith in Jesus Christ, and receives all its vitality from that root. There is but one command which the sinner is called upon to perform before evangelical faith. This is repentance.

There is a divine philosophy in the order of these two precepts, "repent and believe." Repentance towards God must precede faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Such repentance as leads the wicked man to forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, before he can effectually "turn unto God who will abundantly pardon." By this assertion we do not deny that the regenerate soul has a clearer view of his sins, and a stronger abhorrence of his depravity after he is begotten of the Spirit than before that great and glorious work. Now the important question arises: How can this proclivity toward sin be eradicated from the regenerate soul, so that it may hereafter gravitate upward, and not downward? This is the real want of thousands of God-fearing people.

Many have been told that they must wait till death, the greater redeemer than the Son of God, and the mightier sanctifier than the Holy Spirit, has come to their relief. It is true that Jesus does not propose to present us unto himself faultless in the presence of his glory, freed from infirmities, those scars of sin, till we have crossed the river of death. But Jesus has, in this life, a balm for the medication and perfect cure of the wounds of sin in this life. Hence St. Paul exhorts the Corinthians to cleanse themselves "from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." And he prays for the Thessalonians first, that they may be sanctified "wholly," and, secondly, that their "whole spirit, and soul, and body may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." This certainly means sanctification before death, and also preservation in a state of holiness in this life.

Now the important practical question remains to be answered: What must a justified soul do to attain this state of holiness, the extinction of inbred sin within? The words, "obedience of faith," contain the answer. What am I to obey? The sum of the law is epitomized by Jesus: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself." Can I do this in my own strength? No, but I can bring my powers and capacities as empty vessels unto the Holy Spirit, and he will fill them by shedding abroad the love of God in my heart. He does this by revealing to me the fact of God's great love to me, which awakens my soul to his great love, with all the capacity of my being. This bringing my empty heart to God is the act of consecration in obedience to Christ's summary of man's whole duty. When this is done, and unwavering faith in the divine promise accompanies the act, the soul realizes the cleansing power and the fulness of God. But when the faith is inadequate, the cleansing may take place, but not the fulness of God. From this state the believer either very soon falls back into the old mixed life of sin and repentance, or goes forward to the experience of "all the fulness of God."

To abide in this state of perfect victory and full trust, we are to walk by the same rule of "the obedience of faith," and mind the same things that we did when we entered this state, by daily consecration, and a renewed grasp of the promises. The power of God must be relied upon as much in our abiding as in our entering this state. We are to be "kept by the power of God through faith." When we find a stream steadily flowing without a supplying fountain, we may expect to find a soul living in holiness without the enabling efficiency of the Holy Spirit. The figure of "a well of water springing up into eternal life," is explained subsequently by John as the fulness of the Spirit in the heart. Compare John 4: 14 with 7: 37–39.

The intimate connection between obedience and faith is expressed by Christ, when he says, "If any man will do (or will to do), his will, he shall know of the doctrine." . . .

The fact that genuine faith always includes obedience, is a sufficient answer to the skeptic's objection that salvation is made to hinge upon a bare intellectual act, without reference to the character of the agent. It is just the opposite. It is an act of submission to the highest authority in the universe; an act which tends to conserve the moral order of the world, by enthroning the moral law in universal supremacy.

A singular confirmation of the truth of these remarks is found in the Greek Testament, where apitheia, unbelief, is usually used to signify disobedience and obstinacy. The unbelief for which men are to be everlastingly condemned, lies in the rebellious attitude of the will toward Jesus Christ, and not in any supposed innocent intellectual inability to believe the truth of God's word.

The practical bearing of all this upon those who are seeking to be lifted into the higher altitudes of christian experience is, that the faith which is the required condition of such a spiritual uplift, is possible only to a soul whose obedience has reached the point of entire surrender to the will of God, where there is a willingness to walk to Calvary with the fainting Christ, and to be crucified with him.

Then, and then only, will the Christ-life take the place of the old self-life, enabling the believer to adopt St. Paul's words, "I am crucified with Christ; . . . it is no longer I that live, but Christ that liveth in me." Let no one accuse Luther of boasting, when through "the obedience of faith" he reached that deadness to sin, and that conscious fulness of the divine life, which enabled him to say, "If any man knocks at the door of my breast and says, "Who lives there? my answer is, Jesus Christ lives here, not Martin Luther." The great reformer did not stumble into this christian experience. To reach it he was often closeted with God three hours a day studying the divine promises, and wrestling with the Lord as Jacob with the angel.—Contributor.

"WITHOUT ME YE CAN DO NOTHING."

A text that should be hung up in every pastor's study, and in every business man's counting room, in all reformatory homes, either for children, or the more advanced in vice and sin. Were this done, there would be fewer inefficient sermons and prayer-meetings, less of the world, and more of God in every effort to do good. Men try to reform the fallen by cruel punishment and brutal force. We have had quite enough evidence of this in this community during the last year, one would think, to satisfy all, that a change should be made in our methods. The law of kindness and love is the reformatory rule prescribed by Christ; not anger, force and cruelty. Kind words, soft utterances, are weighty and effective with all, and especially the fallen and imbruted. When will governments learn to treat men as human beings, when brought into their hands by degradation and vice?

"Pilate said unto him, knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee? Jesus answered, thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." Even the power of the political ruler is from God. The prophet said to a corrupt monarch, "The God in whose hand thy breath is, hast thou not glorified." For that reason God took his breath away that same night. If all power is from God, and every man has his very breath by divine permission and influence, certainly it becomes all men to recognize the source of all life and usefulness.

How easy it is for even the pious, to forget that the success of all their labor depends on the presence and aid of Christ, moment by moment. The minister may read almost every day the words of his Master, "Without me ye can do nothing," and yet compose his sermon, ascend the pulpit, and deliver it with a fearless air, hardly once thinking of God in the whole transaction. All men admit in theory that God rules the world, in small matters as well as in the affairs of nations. And yet religious people, in laying their plans, hardly think that all will be fruitless of good without the constant favor of God. Very little may be thought of his influence after all. What is said of the profane and wicked, may often, far too often, be said of the religious, "God is not in all their thoughts," for hours together.

Churches may be built and dedicated, sermons preached, prayers offered up in appropriate language, protracted meetings appointed and carried on for weeks, with but little thought of the words of Christ, "Without me ye can do nothing." Such is the habit of forgetfulness, even among the sincere, pious and good. I herein suggest a truth that I am sure will come home to the thoughts, and challenge the conviction of most believers.

THE REMEDY.

Most wisely did Mr. Wesley advise all his people, and especially his helpers in the ministry of reconciliation, "always to set God before them." He who would succeed in any pious work, must do this, or he "fights uncertainly," or merely "beats the air.' Forms of prayer have their use, and should be regularly kept up by all. But many who pray sincerely and conscientiously, fail to keep God constantly before them. Hence a sense of absolute reliance on God is almost impossible, and a certain illy-defined dependence on self, and the means used in obedience to law, is sure to supervene. To set God before us all the time in labor and rest, and to look alone to him for success in all we do, is to live a life of faith. All such will he "guide into all truth," and cause them "to triumph in every place."

That is one reason why we preach holiness so earnestly and constantly. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," seeing him in prayer, in preaching, and in visiting from house to house, in the chamber of the sick and dying, in the place of trade, in sickness, temporal losses, and in the death of loved ones. All is seen to be in the hand of Him who loves us too well to allow us any harm. Let any one try this remedy for dull prayers, dull sermons, and all stupor in the religious life, and my word for it, he will have more joys than sorrows to recite in detailing his daily experience. Mark, the remedy is in setting God before him in all he does, and trying momentarily to feel, as well as say, "Without Christ I can do nothing. I have no power unless it be given me from above."—Christian Standard.

THE RESTITUTION.—ACTS 3: 21.

Adam received the doom, "Cursed be the ground—thorns and thistles shall it bring forth," etc. For this cause Jesus wears the thorns, that he might cancel the doom; for this cause also was he buried in the earth, that the cursed earth might receive, instead of the curse, the blessing.

Our Lord Jesus Christ then comes from heaven, and he comes with glory at the end of the world, in the last day. For this world shall have an end, and this created world shall be made new. For since corruption, and theft, and adultery, and every sort of sins, have been poured forth over the earth, and blood has been mingled with blood in the world, therefore that this wondrous dwelling-place may not remain filled with iniquity, this world shall pass away, that the fairer world may be made manifest. And wouldst thou receive proof of this out of the express words of Scripture? Listen to Esaias, saying, "And the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fall down as the leaf falleth off from the vines, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree." And the gospel says, "The sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven."

The Lord shall not roll up the heavens, that he may destroy them, but that he may raise them up again, more beautiful. Hear David the prophet, saying, "Thou, Lord, in the beginning, hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands; they shall perish, but thou remainest." But some one will say, "Behold, he says plainly, they shall perish." Here in what sense he says they shall perish, it is plain from what follows: "And they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed." For as a man is said to "perish," according to that which is written, "The righteous perisheth and no man layeth it to heart," and this, though the resurrection is looked for, so we look for a resurrection, as it were, of the heavens also, "The sun shall be turned into darkness, the moon into blood." And again, hear Christ saying, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away;" for the creatures are not equal in honor with the Master's words.

The things then which are seen shall pass away, and there shall come the things which are looked for; things fairer than these; but as to the time, let no one be curious. For "it is not for you," he says, "to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." And venture not thou to declare when these things shall be, nor, on the other hand, abandon thyself to slumber. For he saith, "Watch, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." But seeing that it behooved us to know the signs of the end, and whereas we are looking for Christ, therefore we may not be deceived and perish, nor be led astray by that false Antichrist, the apostles, moved by the divine will, address themselves by a providential arrangement to the true Teacher, and say, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" We look for thee to come again, but Satan is transformed into an angel of light; put us therefore on our guard, that we may not worship another instead of thee. And he, opening his mouth, says, "Take heed that no man deceive you."

And you, hearers, who now, as it were, see him with the eyes of your mind, listen to him saying the same things to you likewise: "Take heed that no man deceive you." And this word exhorts you all to give heed to what is spoken; for it is not a tale of things gone by, but a prophecy of things future, and which will surely come. We prophesy not, for we are unworthy; but we set before you the things which are written, and tell you the signs. Observe then which of them have already come to pass, and which yet remain, and make thyself safe.—St. Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, A. D. 350.

A Foot Lamp.—One of the most interesting things in the Holy Land is the fact that one meets everywhere, in daily life, the things that illustrate the Word of the Lord. The streets of Jerusalem are very narrow, and no one is allowed to go out at night without a light. Throw open your lattice in the evening and look out, you will see what seem to be little stars twinkling on the pavement. You will hear the clatter of sandals, as the late traveler rattles along. As the party approaches, you will see that he has a little lamp fastened to his foot, to make his step a safe one. In an instant the verse comes to your memory, written in that same city three thousand years ago—"Thy Word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path."—Ex.

WESTFIELD.—We commenced meetings in Westfield, Monday evening, Nov. 15th, in the neat and commodious chapel where the church meets with Bro. J. Hemenway as pastor. We found the church in a healthy condition, and ready for hearty co-operation with their pastor in revival work. The prospect at present (Nov. 17th) is very encouraging. Some have already confessed their sins and been blest. We are expecting to see a glorious work in this place. The Spirit of the Lord is moving upon the hearts of the people.

SPRINGFIELD.—The meetings in Springfield continue to increase in interest. The Lord is bestowing very rich blessings. It is the unanimous expression, that these are the best meetings we have ever enjoyed in this city. One chief reason for this is because so many have made a full consecration to Jesus. As the result, he has filled them with his Spirit, producing perfect love and peace. Yesterday (Nov. 14th) was a precious day in the Lord. Three young converts were baptized in the Conn. River. Four united with the church, which is alive in spiritual things. Members of other denominations unite with us in sweet communion.

PRESS THE BATTLE.—Thank the Lord that so many in these trying times are ready to respond to the three months' proposition, and make a sacrifice to bless others with the reading of "our paper." We may expect blessed results. If we ever make sacrifices for others, it should be in hard times, like the present. "Have faith in God." Give to him, and fear not to trust him to provide. He knows no hard times. His resources never fail. He can take care of those who trust him in hard times, as well as when great prosperity prevails. This Bro. Muller has found true in the care of his twenty-four hundred orphan children. Some said to him, when the Franco-German war broke out, Are you not afraid that the orphan children in your care will be deprived of support? Bro. Muller assured the inquirers that the Lord could take care of the orphans as well in war times as in peace; and thus it has proved. There was no lack. Remember there are no panics in the Lord's financial matters.

PURITY.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—MATT 5: 8.

Purity of heart is a vital qualification for all who desire to be saved in the kingdom of God. Nothing else can be substituted in its place. One may have but little knowledge, but little light, and yet have a pure heart, and be ready for the day of judgment, while another may be well informed in all the prophecies, the signs of the times, the doctrine of the Bible; be able to teach and preach these great truths correctly, and still have an impure heart, and be lost. If one lives up to what light and truth he can comprehend, trusting himself wholly in the hands of Jesus, he has nothing to fear. But he who depends at all on his knowledge, or his works, for salvation, will find he has built on the sand, and lacks that which is most essential—a pure heart. This is the one thing needful for all who wish to be ready to meet Christ at his coming.

We shall not be saved because we belong to this or that denomination; because we believe this or that doctrine; because we have done this or that; but because the heart is pure—free from sin.

Inasmuch as it is a fact that many hold the truth in unrighteousness, it follows that truth alone will not save people. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9. The presence or absence of the Holy Spirit in the heart is what decides whether he shall be saved or lost. As there are many devoted christians filled with the Spirit, loving God with all the heart, who, without doubt are unconsciously holding erroneous doctrines, it follows that one may have a pure heart before his theology is all correct. The fact that the heart is pure affords no certainty that the person's doctrinal belief is right in all respects. Cleansing does not mean teaching. A half-witted, ignorant person can have as clean a heart as the most learned theologian. If it were not so, then the Lord would be partial to the talented and educated.

If it were necessary to be correct in our doctrine before we can be pure, or holy, then we should be obliged to wait for purity till we could have sufficient time to carefully examine the whole Bible. But this would take many weeks, even months, and perhaps years; and then we might be wrong in our conclusions on some important points. Before we were a quarter through with our investigation, we might be called to sleep the sleep of death, or to behold Christ coming in the clouds of heaven; hence, if a pure heart depended on a correct knowledge of the Scriptures, we should be found unprepared for the kingdom of heaven.

Thank the Lord it is so arranged that every one can have a pure heart who will at once submit all to Christ, letting him have the full control, yielding to obey him in all things, so far as his will is known; being ready to embrace light and truth as fast as it is presented clearly to the understanding. Every one who thus chooses can now give himself into the hands of Jesus, to be eternally his, without the least reserve, and thus secure a pure heart by the cleansing power of the Holy Spirit, which is sure to follow entire consecration. Why not do it NOW?

A RECONSIDERATION.

A brother very kindly invites us to reconsider a statement we made in an article we wrote on holiness, published in the Crisis of Sept. 29, 1875, in which we say, "This change (being created in righteousness and true holiness), is produced by the same power of God which 'created' man in the beginning, when he stamped him with his moral image, which was lost by sin, and is restored by conversion."

The question raised by the inquiry, if we understand it, is, Did God exercise the same power in creating man's organism as is exercised when a sinner is "created in righteousness?" In other words, was not the first act of creation produced by "physical power" and the latter by "moral mind force?" Power is "ability to act;" "capacity for acting." It is force or energy in acting. Physical power is the energy or force of material matter—organism—"created existences;" as men, beasts, steam, mechanism, etc. "Mind force" is moral or spiritual power, and is the energy or capacity for acting of intangible or immaterial agents, will, spirit, etc. The direct question now comes up, Was the creative power of God which produced man in the beginning exercised through any material body or matter, or was it will force, the energy of a divine Spirit?

God created this world, animate and inanimate, by the power of his Spirit, according to Moses testimony. He said, in viewing the chaotic matter out of which the earth was created and the darkness with which it was wrapped, "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Gen. 1: 2. The Spirit of God "moved," acted, exerted energy, power, "upon the face of the waters," and changed them, brought order out of confusion, created the matter into a habitable globe and some of it into living beings to dwell upon its surface.

To stand at the head of all these creatures, as ruler of the earth, he created man. He was a part of this creation produced by the same power and by the same changeless laws as all other parts of the created whole. It was the almighty energy and force of God's will and Spirit which became the creative power of this world, and not the force of matter or of an organism, consequently was not a "physical power," but a spiritual, divine power. We mistake, when we suppose that it requires a physical power to produce a physical result. A heavenly power may produce earthly things.

God's laws are changeless, and it will take the same power, governed by the same rules, to renew and recreate our world, that it did to produce it in the beginning. It was a power infinitely above any inherent power of earthly matter, organic or inorganic, producing results anterior and infinitely superior to anything produced by natural earth forces; therefore all of its action which is above and outside of earthly power is miraculous to man, who, without inspiration, can only comprehend the scientific results of earth forces.

For this reason "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

Men manifest great ignorance, and reason from a very false premise, when they refuse to believe anything which they cannot understand as being produced by the natural action of material or scientific forces. The manifestation of God's power in this world on its highest plane is one grand series of miracles to men. What we mean by the highest plane is this: We understand this world to be governed by laws and powers appointed of God, as applicable to a cursed fallen world, where all its forces tend to change, ruin and death. But God has introduced into this world laws and forces which act upon a higher plane, and are designed to produce exactly opposite results, and to restore a ruined world to its original perfection, with all its parts, creatures and glory.

These two classes of principles and forces seem to the unanointed eye as antagonistic, but in the light of inspiration all is harmony. All the principles and powers designed to control and operate in this world, while it is under the curse, are so employed as to continue the curse. These are natural laws and scientific principles; the highest known to men outside of divine revelation or the holy unction. All spiritual forces, we mean all power operating on the higher plane of the world to come, manifested in this world, in preparing for that world, or establishing it at its completion, are antiscientific; and every act accomplished by it is, from an earthly, natural stand-point, a miracle.

The application and operation of the Word and Spirit of God upon the human heart in convicting it of sin, changing it to a condition of holiness, producing all the variety of christian experiences, and giving direct answers to prayer, are an unbroken series of miruculous manifestations. All these are above and beyond science.

There has been another class of events upon the earth, produced by the higher forces, which counteracted or suspended natural laws and forces, such as the conception of Isaac and Jesus. Daniel's safety among hungry lions, the protection of the Hebrew captives in the midst of the consuming heat of the fiery furnace, the parting of the waters of the Red Sea and the Jordan, the residence of Jonah in the fish, a long series of prophetic fulfillments, the superhuman deeds of Christ, and the unvarying accomplishment, through eighteen centuries, of all he foretold. These are all supplemented, and receive the divine seal of almighty creative and *re*creative power by the resurrection of the dead. It positively requires creative power to *re*organize and *re*vivify the dead; for the elements of the human body after death do go back to their original conditions and combinations, as they were when the adamic organism was created. Therefore it takes exactly the same skill and power to resurrect a dead man that it did to create the first man; and they are in both cases vitalized into life by the breath—spirit—of the Creator.

That God employs the same spiritual power to change the heart of man and give him a christian experience that he does to raise the dead, appears evident from the following passages: "And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead." Eph. 1: 19, 20. The "working of his mighty power" in a believer is "according to"—the same as—that which "raised Christ from the dead." He explains himself in the context, making the action of the power in the two cases parallel, when he says—"And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." The quickening, spiritually, at conversion, is made parallel to and illustrative of the resurrection of the body physically.

Exactly the same truth is expressed in Romans 8: 11. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." It is the same power of the Spirit that quickens us to newness of life and obedience to God, that created man in the beginning, and will resurrect or recreate him at the last day.

It is a glorious thought which gives the believer strong assurance, that the same almighty power of the Spirit which created the worlds, organized and endowed man, stilled the winds, calmed the seas, healed the diseased, and raised the dead, brought Christ out of Joseph's tomb, and carried him up to the gate of glory, also helps us believe God's Word, obey him joyfully, and hold self and the world in subjection to the will of God. The same hand which guides a star, guides the feet of the most poor and feeble saint. The same power which wheels the planets over their trackless path seals the sacred truths of revelation on the christian's heart.

Then look up, ye weary, tempted children of God, and remember that the Governor of the universe moulds thy heart into the image of his Son, and robes thee with his own righteousness, and prepares thee by his wonderful grace for the realms of everlasting bliss. Cast thyself into his arms, and rest safely in Jehovah's keeping. Be sure and know for yourselves personally that the sinner's Friend has received you as a member of his royal society, and if so, that all the guards of the divine throne are charged to defend thee from the assaults of all foes, and safely conduct thee into the presence of Him who hath bought thee with his blood.

WHO WAS MELCHISEDEC?

There has been much speculation about the saying of Paul in Heb. 7: 1–4, which reads as follows:—"For this Melchizedek, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation king of righteousness, and after that also king of Salem, which is, king of peace; without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually. Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils."

An old translation reads: "His father, his mother, his pedigree, are no where mentioned; the time of his birth and of his death is not recorded; a character that is extremely similar to the Son of God, as he was invested with the priesthood liable to no succession."

It is quite reasonable to suppose that this Melchisedec was some person who lived before the flood, as well as after; hence, in Abraham's time, there was no record of his birth, or pedigree.

In the Book of Jasher (the Upright Book), we find the following: "And Adonizedek, king of Jerusalem, the same was Shem, went out with his men to meet Abram and his people, with bread and wine, and they remained together in the valley of Melech. And Adonizedek blessed Abraham, and Abram gave him a tenth from all that he had brought from the spoil of his enemies, for Adonizedek was a priest of God." Book of Jasher, 16: 11, 12. Here it is plainly stated that the priest was the same person as Shem, who was a son of Noah. Shem lived after the flood over three hundred and fifty years before the birth of Abram, and was the only one then alive that had lived before the flood. This fact would make Shem, called also Melchisedec, or Adonizedek, a very noted man. No one but himself could give an account of his life, or tell what took place before and during the flood. He had a kind of pre-existence in a world of which the people in Abram's time knew nothing. To them, he was "without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life." He stood as the only representative of the world before the flood, with no one living who could declare his pedigree, for his father, mother and brethren were all dead. He must have been a remarkable man in the estimation of that generation.

PLATONISM.

Perhaps some might be surprised, if it were said that there are now more professors of religion following the doctrines of Plato and Socrates, than of Christ. Let us look at some facts in the case. What did those heathen philosophers teach? Plato taught that man has an "immortal and rational soul," which he also called the "divine principles." Socrates taught that "the soul is immortal." When speaking of "departed souls," he says:

"Those who have passed their lives in a manner neither entirely criminal, nor absolutely innocent, are sent into a place where they suffer pains proportioned to their faults, till, being purged and cleansed of their guilt, are afterwards restored to their liberty, and receive the reward of the good actions done in the body.

Those who are judged to be incurable on account of the greatness of their crimes, who have deliberately committed sacrileges, or murders, and other such great offenses, the fatal destiny that passes judgment upon them hurls them into Tartarus, from whence they never depart.

But those who are found guilty of crimes great indeed, but worthy of pardon, who have committed violence in the transports of rage against their father or mother, or have killed some one in like emotion, and afterwards repented, these suffer the same punishment and in the same place, but for a time only, till, by their prayers and supplications, they have obtained pardon from those whom they have injured.

But those who have passed through life with peculiar sanctity of manners, delivered from their base earthly abodes, as from a prison, are received on high in a pure region, which they inhabit, and, as philosophy has sufficiently purified them, they live without their bodies through all eternity, in a series of joys and delights it is not easy to describe."

It will be seen at a glance, that the Roman Catholic Church copied largely from the Pagan system, modifying it sufficiently to make it acceptable to backslidden professors, and not enough so but that the Pagans could be united with them in the worship of saints instead of heroes. This was a master stroke of policy on the part of Satan. He first established among the Pagans a system of worship, which was the outgrowth of his lie to Adam and Eve, when he taught them that they had immortal souls, and should never die. Instead of worshiping the true God, Satan persuaded the Pagans to worship departed heroes. Having accomplished this among the Pagans, his next plan was to introduce his lie in the church, with a corresponding system of worship. This was successfully done in the system adopted by the Roman Catholic Church, which teaches its members to worship departed saints instead of God, especially the Virgin Mary. This system has been spread throughout the world. As saith the Scripture, when speaking of the Roman Catholic Church, symbolized by the woman on the scarlet-colored beast: "All nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." The entire systems of Paganism and Catholocism would fall at once, were it not for the false doctrine of the immortality of the soul, which is their chief foundation.

Satan is now making one more grand effort to overthrow pure christianity, by introducing his system of theology in a varied form, called Spiritualism. Through this, he hopes to lead many back more fully into Paganism. Thank God, holy men are beginning to get their eyes open to his devices, and think more of divine truth than human creeds founded in error. A theological revolution is at hand. Buried truths are being dug out of the theological rubbish, where they have been long obscured, and are now shining forth as polished diamonds, to the admiration and joy of thousands of Jesus' loving disciples. That horrid Catholic system of error and iniquity, that has done so much towards mystifying the word of the Lord, and keeping the human race in darkness, is about to be fully exposed to every true follower of Christ. The true doctrine of the Bible—Jesus and the resurrection—is coming to the front in the last great conflict with the powers of darkness.

Just let common sense have a little exercise for a few moments. Imagine, if you can, a company of men living "without their bodies through all eternity." Having no bodies, of course, they could have no feet, hands, arms, faces, eyes, ears, mouths, heads, hearts, lungs, nor senses, consequently, they could not walk with any one, nor take hold of friends in fond embrace, for there are no bodies to touch; they could not hear, see, smell, taste, speak, nor feel. Does the Bible teach anything about bodiless saints in the kingdom of heaven? Not a word, but directly the opposite.

We cannot be anybody without a body. Let us come back upon the rock bottom of the pure doctrine of the sacred Scriptures, and believe that they teach the truth, when they say, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 16–18.

That cannot be a Bible doctrine which is not taught in the Bible. We have not been able to find a word in it about the immortality of the soul or spirit. Why are the sacred Scriptures silent on the subject? Simply because it is unscriptural. It is not true. The doctrine came from the heathen, not from God. It was first taught by Satan in the garden of Eden. The word of the Lord is opposed to it, as well as all true philosophy, reason, science and facts. Why is it, that in the entire Bible, there is not a single passage where the words soul or spirit are qualified by the terms immortal, undying, everlasting, endless, or any equivalent expressions? We can conceive of no good reason, only because, if they were thus applied, the statement would be false, and in harmony with the teaching of Satan and anti-Christ.

Is it not high time to leave human creeds, of Papal origin, and come back to the plain word of the Lord? Is it not time to turn Platonism out of Christianity, and inquire for the old Bible paths of sound doctrine? Let faithful men of God, who see these things, stand forth with holy boldness, and declare the whole truth, exposing the great lie of the arch deceiver, who was the first to teach the immortality of the soul. Gen. 3: 4. The evils that have sprung from a belief in that lie are truly alarming. It is the chief corner-stone of every false system of religion in the world. Take that out, and they would all tumble into a heap of rubbish.

AG'T.

BRO. S. F. LEAVITT, Danbury, N. H., writes:—"Jesus has sweetly kept me ever since he preciously saved me, more than two years ago. I am his to-day. Bless his dear, sweet name! I am daily enjoying rich feasts at the table of his love. Through Christ I stand in victory. Allow me to call your mind to the counsel I asked of you at the Alton Bay campmeeting, about my cider apples. Well, I firmly resolved to act upon your advice, and let my orchard preach temperance, by way of rotten apples, rather than have them made into cider to drown men's reasons by the heavy curse of intemperance. Of course I should be tried, to see if I would hold fast mine integrity. I told you, Bro. Grant (and Bro. Couch the same), that I needed the income of that orchard. You said the Lord would make it up in some way, if it was in blessing. Well, he has done the whole thing. You know that Diabolos is always ready to jump on to the stage and exert his influence first. Acting upon this principle, he sent a man early one morning to buy my apples for cider. He tried hard to effect a bargain, but money to me was no inducement against the righteousness of temperance. So he left without purchasing. At noon of the same day, the Lord sent a man saying he wanted to buy my apples for cider to boil down for making sauce, and for vinegar. I sold the apples to him, and the Lord blessed the trade. I saved about thirty-five bushels for pie and winter apples, and while others cannot sell their apples for pies, I have no difficulty in selling mine, for when I go out to sell some, the Lord goes before me."

Bless the Lord, Bro. Leavitt, that you have not bowed to the enemy. Hold fast your integrity. Stand up for Jesus. Rotten apples in the field will be found more profitable at last, than barrels of cider in the cellar, waiting for the jovial bowl. Let every one looking for Jesus beware of the viper in the cider cup. We have seen strong men fall through its debasing influence. Plug up the cider, and let it turn to vinegar.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Archbishop Bailey, Roman Catholic, says, "The age is one of worldliness. Those principles of truthfulness and honor and self-respect which come from religion are too much passing away. We are living in an atmosphere of immorality and dishonesty, which has lowered the type of religious faith and practice. Too many regulate their lives by the maxims of the world. Parents are careless of the education of their children and heedless of what they read."

Daniel Dougherty in his late lecture in this city said, "France, England, Italy, Germany, aye, even Russia, are infested with socialism, communism, the Carbonari, and the like, which neither king nor kaiser nor czar can suppress. . . . Our country swarms with secret and oath-bound combinations, many of them aiming at alterations in law. Scientists are aiding them by denying revelation, and soon the skepticism of the schools may become politics at the polls. Then may come a harvest of horrors."—The Prophetic Times.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

TO ALL WHOM IT CONCERNS.

Dear Brethren:—By a notice in the Crisis, from the Board of Directors of the A. C. Association, calling a special meeting to consider the changing of the Constitution of that body so as to form a new basis of representation, it seems they have decided that there ought to be a change. All those who know the unequal workings of the present Constitution, and who desire an equal and correct representation of the body in the choice of its officers and management of its business, must realize that a change is greatly needed.

The important question now to consider is, what change shall be made in the Constitution to produce the desired results? A constitution and rules of action should be as simple and direct as possible. Inasmuch as one lengthy article, suggesting a plan for a new Constitution, has been already set before the readers of the Crisis, and as that plan seems very complicated, perhaps it may be well to lay a more simple and direct suggestive plan before those who may come together to make such changes as may then be decided upon.

The Association claims to be composed of representatives of all believers within the limits of its sphere of action who co-operate with it. This is a very elastic phrase, and one quite beyond the power of the body to define. A more distinct identification is certainly needed in these days of theological chaos and denominational discord. We think the Association will consent to change its title to that of General Conference. The cohesive, active elements of the Second Advent body are now either organized (or in process of organization), into State, or sectional, annual conferences. These conferences are the active, local organs of the body, as the churches are the active organs of the conferences. The churches can, and should, be properly represented by delegates to the annual conferences, and not to the General Conference. These annual conferences should be equally and properly represented by delegates to the General Conference. We will suggest the following points:

1. That each annual conference elect (according to its numerical strength), one, two, three, or more delegates from its own members, preachers or laymen, annually, to attend the General Conference, with such instructions as they think proper.

2. These delegates may each attend the General Conference, whether near or remote; or either one may choose any one of the number elected, who will attend, to vote for him by proxy (as he may instruct), by a written certificate to that effect, and if any delegate or delegates elected by an annual conference having the right of representation, shall reside over six hundred miles from the place of the General Conference, and neither delegate of his conference can attend, he may, by letter, choose, instruct, and empower any properly elected delegate of any other conference to vote for him, the letter of authority being deposited by the proxy in the hands of the Secretary of the General Conference.

3. The General Conference shall be composed of its elected Board and these elected delegates, and shall meet annually at such time and place as the Board shall appoint, to transact its general business for the body.

4. That the General Conference shall not hold an annual session in connection with any campmeeting or other general gathering of the body.

5. That all the officers of the General Conference shall constitute the Board of Managers.

6. That the Board shall have power to fill any vacancies that may occur during the fiscal year, and transact any other business for the body which demands immediate action.

7. That no member of the Board shall vote for any officer or committee, in constituting a Board of officers, at any General Conference session unless he be an elected delegate from an annual conference.

8. All officers and editors appointed by the General Conference shall be chosen by ballot, and all committees shall be nominated from the floor.

I submit the above for the consideration of the brethren, believing it will, if adopted in its general principles, produce an equal and proper representation of the body.
I. C. WELLCOME.

PERSONAL EFFORT.

A. P. MOORE.

That we are in a time when personal effort is greatly needed in the church is true. People want the minister to do all the talking to sinners about their salvation. I was forcibly struck by a remark of a lady, while riding on the cars in Ohio. She sat in the seat in front of me, and was in tears much of the forenoon. I entered into conversation with her, and found she was summoned to the death bed of her father. I tried to comfort her as best I could, and asked her if she was a christian, and had a Savior's arm to lean upon; She said "yes," and was so thankful to find one, though a stranger, that would manifest any sympathy for her in her sorrow. She said to me, "You must be a minister." I told her I was. She said she thought I was, for "none but ministers talk to people in that way now-a-days."

It is too true. Is it any more the duty of a minister to talk with people than others? I think not. The church is greatly deficient in this respect. Many people never think of going to their friends and neighbors, and trying to get them to become christians. Jesus has called none into his vineyard to be idlers. Go to work. If you wish the Master to say to you at last "Well done," you must do well. Don't try to shirk responsibility, and put it on to the preacher. Do your duty. Be faithful in your work, and then you will enjoy religion. Work, rest, and trust.

Correspondence.

From Sr. E. I. Crouse.

As I am always interested in the letters written for the Crisis, I have been thinking that I, too, might write a few lines. Although a stranger to all, or nearly all of the readers of "our paper," I feel that we are brethren and sisters, children of one great family. I have read the Crisis for about three years, and have been much benefitted thereby. From my earliest recollection, I was taught to believe in the doctrines held by the Methodists. I grew to womanhood firmly believing that I possessed an immortal soul, which at death would go to heaven or hell, according as I was good or bad. And I remember, when a little child, of wondering about little brothers and sisters that had died, how they looked; and it grieved me, because I feared that I should not know them when I, too, went to heaven; for I always meant to be good sometime, and to go there.

When I was married, I expected to convince my husband in a very short time that the Bible was full of those doctrines that had been taught me. But he had "known the holy Scriptures from a child," and was firm in the belief of Jesus' soon coming, to reward the living and the dead according to their works. I could not convince him that he was in an error, but the more I searched the Bible to find my proof, the more I found to shake my faith in what I had been taught. It was some time before I was really convinced, and then came the cross of confessing my new-found faith. Satan put many excuses in my mind, but thank God, I received strength to stand up for Jesus and his truth. And I can say of a truth, that I love the "blessed hope." I am endeavoring by the grace of God to ever live a humble christian life.

Truly, the thought of soon seeing Him "whom having not seen we love," should inspire us all with renewed zeal in the Master's service. Well does the apostle Peter ask, "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" Surely we should be "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." In my poor way, I am endeavoring to show the beauty and simplicity of these blessed truths to those who as yet know them not. There are a goodly number here who believe God's Word, but we have no one at present to preach the good news of the kingdom. I do wish that some faithful watchman would come here to labor, for the harvest is plenteous. Pray for your sister, looking for the Coming One.
East Washburn, Me.

From Bro. P. C. Marsh.

Dear Editors and readers of our beloved paper:—I came to this city, May 28th, 1873. A short time after, with the assistance of two others, we hired a hall, and commenced to preach the word, but owing to the extreme heat, and the many attractions, and so many different sects and denominations, our meetings were very thinly attended; so much so, that we thought best to give them over for the present. The following summer, a Bro. Moss and family came from Lockport, N. J., but I was not made aware of their presence till the fore part of last winter, when, through their instrumentality, Eld. R. H. Bateman, formerly of Lockport, came here to deliver a course of lectures; but, owing to a very strong Christadelphian element, which come to the meetings just for controversy (they, repudiating the fact of the Holy Spirit's leading, or keeping men, since the days of the apostles, and those to whom they transmitted it by the laying on of hands), so that much good that seemingly might have been done was by that means hindered; but I thank God that he came here, for thereby some faithful ones were drawn together. We have held regular meetings since then from house to house. We have a Bible class each Saturday, at 11 A. M., generally preaching, as the Lord pleases to direct the writer of this, in the evening, The blessed truths that we as a people love so dearly are being very earnestly looked into by many people here. We have very interesting meetings every Friday evening for the study of the Scriptures. Some of the Baptist brethren are almost constant attendants, and we in return attend theirs for the same purpose, on Monday evenings. One of them, Bro. Walters, a local preacher, preached for us, by request, last Lord's day evening. He loves the appearing of Jesus, and all kindred truths. Your correspondent spoke to-night to a goodly number, from 2 Timothy, 3rd chapter, after which nine waiting children gathered around the table of their absent Lord, and partook of the emblems of his broken body and shed blood, as a remembrancer of his death till he come again.

Oh what a glorious prospect is this, of soon seeing Him, who is the author of our precious faith. We extend a cordial invitation to all preaching brethren, who are traveling this way, to make us a call. Hamilton is a thriving city, of 30.000 inhabitants, situated about forty-three miles west of Suspension Bridge, on the Great Western R. R. My address is 33 Hughson St. North. Or, if any one should call during working hours, come to R. M. Wanzer's & Co's Sewing-machine factory.

Brethren, pray for us, that we may be kept in patient waiting for the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Hamilton, Ont.

From Bro. A. B. Swanesburg.

Dear Brethren:—"My days are gliding swiftly by." I am failing fast. My labor is about over. I hope to meet you in the better world. I long for rest. I hope Jesus will come soon. I long to see him as he is and be made like him. I ask the prayers of God's dear saints. Pray for me, brethren.

I have had to pass through great trials of late, but all will be over in a little while from this. Perhaps you will know all soon, and perhaps not, but I know the Judge is coming. I feel I shall die a martyr for the cause of truth in Nova Scotia. I know what it is to be destitute, and to suffer need, but this is nothing compared to false brethren. The Lord bless Bro. Grant and Bro. Couch. The Lord bless all the dear household of faith. Yours in the deep waters of affliction.

Shelburne, N. S.

From Bro. I. N. Thompson.

Dear Editors:—The Lord is working gloriously with some of the people here. Two years ago only a few had listened to the truths we hold so dear; but Mr. R. D. Jones cheerfully opened his hall for meetings, and the Word has been preached, and has taken effect in the hearts of many honest souls. Yesterday Eld. Jared Whitman led six precious souls down into the water. Although it was cold, they showed evidence that it was good for them to be there. All were heads of families, and one we are pleased to say was the owner of the hall, who, we feel certain, is richly rewarded for his generosity and kindness to the cause of Christ and his dear children in the place. We would ascribe all the praise to the Lord in whom we trust.

Sabattus, Me.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. G. F. Haines, Bonny Eagle, Me., writes:—"Perhaps some would like to know that the Lord is richly blessing us in Bonny Eagle. We came to this place last June, and since that time we have enjoyed a great deal of the presence of God. Quite a number of backsliders have taken a decided stand for the Lord, and in so doing have been richly blest. Still there are others that we think will come soon. To God be all the glory. The next quarterly session of the York Co. Conference is to be held with us, commencing Dec. 9th, and we extend a hearty invitation to all lovers of Jesus to come and enjoy the feast with us. I would say to those brethren who have given us such urgent invitations to visit them, that the interest here demands our attention at present."

Bro. H. Munger writes, Nov. 22nd:—"The meetings yet continue interesting in New Bedford. Some conversions; five baptized Sabbath, the 21st, and a vote taken to hold over the third week. The Spirit and truth are having a good effect on sinners and backsliders. Thank the Lord. I shall be at liberty in December. I prefer not to go far north."

Obituaries.

Dow. In Kensington, N. H., Nov. 14th, '75, Bro. Newell Dow, aged eighty-one years, eleven months.

The deceased in early life gave his heart to the Lord, and when he heard the gospel of the kingdom preached by Bro. Miller, he readily received and became a firm advocate of the doctrine of the speedy coming of Christ. This was his hope until the day of his death. He leaves a wife and a companion of fifty-three years of domestic life, and children to lament his loss; but they sorrow not as others which have no hope, for they have laid him to rest until the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God shall sound. The writer read the Scriptures, and spoke words of gospel comfort at the funeral service, which was well attended by various classes of people. W. M. Harmon.

Spencer. In Providence, R. I., Oct. 31st, 1875, Sr. Hannah A. Spencer, wife of Bro. Richmond Spencer, aged forty-nine years.

Our sister died with a heart difficulty, and leaves a husband, children, and a large circle of friends to mourn her departure. She died as she lived—a Christian. Although her love for her family was strong, yet her attachment to Jesus, the Life-giver, was more ardent, and now she is resting in hope. May this afflictive dispensation be sanctified to the good of the family, and friends at large. Words of consolation on the funeral occasion were spoken by the writer. A. W. Sibley.

Watson. In Rome, Me., Oct. 28th, 1875, after a long and painful sickness, Sister Corrisan, wife of Elizer Watson, aged thirty-six years.

She fell asleep in the blessed hope of awaking at the sounding of the last trump, to be clad with immortality. She has left a lonely husband and three children to mourn her loss. The writer endeavored to speak words of comfort to the mourners and sympathizing friends, from Rev. 21: 4. F. E. Blaisdell.

Dolloff. In Hudson, N. H., Sept. 20th, 1875, Joie W., youngest son of Annie and William P. Dolloff, aged four years, eight months, and twenty-eight days.

He was a very promising little boy. Death came very unexpectedly. His sweet little voice is hushed. We have laid him away to rest until the resurrection morn.

"Sleep, little Joie, sweetly sleep,
Deep in the silent earth;
Thy precious form is laid away
Till Christ shall call it forth."

Great excitement prevails in England, among the capitalists, over the probability that they must lose money they have loaned to the Turkish Government. They petition the English Government to demand of the Sultan that his obligations to British subjects be met. But the London Times argues that if they loaned their money to a government which could only give doubtful security, because they were tempted with the promise of large interest, they ought not to require the "government to be made debt collector and sheriff's officer for unfortunate speculators."

These things are evidently rapidly reconciling the English people to the long contemplated idea of the Russians taking Constantinople. The Times says, "Some of the injured parties relieve their minds by wishing Russia at Constantinople. . . . The Ottoman Government has lost its moral position, and those who hoped to see it gradually redeeming past errors, now expect nothing but more rapid decay. This may not be altogether reasonable, but the Sick Man will be given up as past curing by some of his friends. . . . Sooner or later, Turkey, as a European State, must cease to exist"—"shall come to his end and none shall help him." Daniel.

Our last foreign files present a gloomy picture of the financial condition of the Old World. The vast outlay for military preparations has produced such immense indebtedness of the governments, and so many men have been taken from the producing classes into the military or non-producing classes, that it is becoming difficult to pay the interest on their debts. Russia, Turkey, Spain, Italy, and Egypt, are reported as being especially straitened.

Russia is reported as having made recent advances in Central Asia, occupying important military posts, as she triumphantly carries her imperial flag southward towards India and the Holy Land. The London Times says:—

"Once more another Russian advance in Central Asia has to be chronicled. It was only the other day that her legions marched from Tashkend to Khokan, and swallowed up the latter Khanate without the least trouble in the world. Now comes news that the irresistible Muscovite has made a fresh stride southward, a force having been despatched to punish the people of Karateghin for alleged complicity in the recent Khakanese rebellion. Whether they were really guilty of this offence or not, does not much matter. If the opportunity appears favorable to General Kaufmann, Karateghin will soon follow the path of the other Khanates in being annexed to Russia. When this is effected, the Muscovite outposts will be getting pretty near the Hindoo Koosh, only Badakshan and Wakkan lying between that range and the little known country of Karateghin. That these two petty provinces will also be absorbed at no remote day may almost be taken for granted, since Russia's geographical position almost necessitates an advance to the Hindoo Koosh, in order to gain a well-defined southern frontier."

Spain.—The rumors of a prospect of war with the United States have caused a great excitement. The most remarkable report is that Don Carlos has sent a proposition to King Alfonso to proclaim a truce of their civil war and unite their armies to fight the United States, and thus defend the Spanish throne, and afterward decide the question of who shall occupy the throne of Spain. J. C.

A very important change was recently made by the Warren Avenue Baptist church, in Boston, of which the Rev. G. F. Pentecost is pastor, in its "Declaration of Faith and Practice." A part of the ninth article was stricken out by a unanimous vote. It reads thus, the exscinded clause being indicated by italics: "We believe that baptism and the Lord's Supper are ordinances instituted by Christ, to be continued until his second coming; that none have a Scriptural right to baptism unless they profess their faith in Christ; that the ordinance can be properly administered only by immersion, and is by Scriptural example a prerequisite to communion at the Lord's table." The church is in point of age the second in Boston, having been founded in 1743.

By a railway accident in Sweden six persons have been killed and twelve injured.

The damage caused by the recent high tide in the Thames is estimated at $5,000,000.

A general religious revival is in progress at Lake Village, N. H. Business is being generally suspended in order to give all persons an opportunity to take part.

The Rev. William Taylor, the "California street preacher," who has recently been laboring in India and England, is holding a series of revival meetings in Chicago.

The evangelists, Messrs. Whittle and Bliss, are now in Minneapolis, Minn. Reports state that their services there are as largely attended as in the other places they have visited.

A series of "union Gospel meetings" will be held throughout Wisconsin during the next four months. The first one was begun at New Richmond, October 19.

A sharp shock of earthquake occurred at San Francisco, at 7 55 o'clock evening, Nov. 14th. The vibrations were east and west. No damage is reported.

By the wreck of the steam-ship Pacific, plying between San Francisco, Victoria, B. C., and Portland, Oregon, about one hundred and sixty lives have been lost.

The Turks are reported to have been defeated by the Herzegovinan insurgents near Gatsenko, in the Herzegovina, with a loss of more than 800 killed, several cannon and all their baggage and ammunition.

PLEASE READ THIS!

I wish to say to all interested, that I intend to publish soon, if sufficient inducements are offered, a work entitled, "Baptism and Rantism," being the revision and completion of what has appeared in part in the Crisis, taking up and treating more exhaustively than in the articles published, the subject of baptism, and treating rantism as it relates to the doctrine of the Atonement. It is proposed to discuss the topics somewhat in the following order:

An old word, and a new one; The Greek etymology of the two; A tabular view; Curious coincidents; Lexicographicals; A hunt for meanings of baptism; Tortuous turnings to find a meaning; Found at last; rantism not to be found; It is waiting for a lexicographer to give it a place; But "baptism" is a Bible word; Found in the English New Testament; How it came there; Untranslated from the original word; The name of an ordinance; To be practised in the church till the end of time; How? Human practices and explainings not to be the guide; What has been called baptism has always, since its institution, been practised; Malpractice; Perversion, falsification, sprinkling, historical illustrations of it; Baptism should be practised according to its true etymological sense, and its symbolical significance; High authority for its true meaning, in its literal sense; The practice taken from a word which had a meaning before it was applied to the ordinance; Are we justified in being particular about it now? References for proof of its meaning; Immersion only; Immersion simply, then, is the form, but the form only is not Christian baptism; What is Christian baptism? The immersion of a proper subject in water, in a proper manner, by a divinely appointed and qualified administrator; The symbolical sense of baptism; Metaphors of baptism.

Part 2. Rantism a new word; Not baptism; What is it? Not found in the English New Testament. What can it mean? Has it any significance to the church of God? "Much every way"; It has long been called something else; The perversion of it has defamed the one and spoiled the other; The Greek original found in the Greek New Testament; Translated in the English from the original word, hence not treated like baptism; Where in the original text the word and its corelatives are found; Examination of authorities for its meaning; Its relation to the atonement; The Blood; Life in the blood; Life and death; Death penalty; Significance of the blood; Sprinkling of the blood, or "blood of sprinkling"; See the use and meaning of the blood of Christ found in the word "rantism"; He came by water and blood, or by baptism and rantism.

While the foregoing topics do not exhaust the list, they give the reader an idea of what the work is designed to do, and all who are interested in it are invited to co-operate to secure its publication. The pamphlet will cost, doubtless, about 25 to 50 cents per single copy, or $15 to $30 per hundred. I have already received evidence that it is needed, and while good things have been published on the subject of baptism, nothing has yet been issued which covers the ground of this, and it is thought to be much needed as a standard work among Advent people. Let all, who will take one copy or more, drop me a postal card immediately, to Richmond, P. Q., that I may know what to do. One thousand subscribers are wanted at once, and if one in ten of the subscribers of the Crisis take a copy, if no more, it will insure success. Please send on your orders. L. C. McKinstry.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

"Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.
An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"
BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.
Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred by express. Agt.

MY PRAYER.

HELEN F. BENJAMIN.

Hear me, my Father! I am weak and weary,
All day I toil for perishable food;
Lonely and sad, the way seems dark and dreary;
Give me strength, my God.

Help me to bear the toilsome march before me,
Up the steep hillside, o'er the thorny road;
When the dark clouds so thickly gather o'er me,
Give me strength, my God.

Help me do right. Oh, heavenly Father, hear me!
Blinded at times, I cannot see my way;
Guide me, my Father, be thou ever near me;
Give me strength, I pray.

Strength to restrain my own rebellious spirit,
Strength to repress the thoughtless, hasty word,
To strive each day thy great reward to merit;
Give me strength, my God.

Comfort me through this long, dark night of sorrow,
Help me to bow beneath thy chastening rod,
To wait the joy which cometh with the morrow";
Give me strength, my God.

Then, when thy hand all earthly ties shall sever,
With that blest throng, whose feet thy ways have trod,
May I be raised to praise thy name forever;
Grant this, my God.

Monson, Mass.

ARE YOU A BACKSLIDER?

J. W. THOMAS.

'What meanest thou, O sleeper?"—JONAH 1: 6.

It does not pay to backslide from God. Jonah found it did not. The Lord told him to go down to Nineveh and preach, but the cross was too heavy, or from some other consideration he declined to go. Thinking that he might get away from the presence of the Lord, he goes down to the wharf, and looking around among the sailors, inquires if there is a vessel about to sail. Yes, say they, there is one just ready to leave for Tarshish. He pays his fare, and steps on board. In this there was a streak of honor about Jonah. He did not mean to go as a dead head, he paid his fare. This is more than runaways generally do.

But poor Jonah was mistaken when he thought to escape duty by going to sea. His conscience was smiting him all the while, and he looked and acted like a person who had done something wrong. The vessel sails on. By-and-by an awful tempest arises,—the wind blows—the waves roll high and splash over the deck—the masts crack and the frightened sailors begin to call upon their gods. The captain goes down below to examine the ship, and see if she leaks or is in danger of giving way, and behold, he finds a man sound asleep. With surprise and earnestness he cries out, "What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, and call upon thy God." How can you sleep when there is such a storm raging? Know ye not that we are in danger of going to the bottom every minute? Arise, arise, "call upon thy God, if so be that we perish not." Poor Jonah crawls out ashamed and conscience stricken. He confesses the whole truth. He tells them who he is, where he is from, and how he had fled from the presence of the Lord. They try to bring the vessel to the shore, but cannot. So they cast lots to see who shall bear the blame. The lot falls upon Jonah. What shall we do with you? Throw me overboard into the sea. So overboard poor Jonah went. The rest of the story I will not mention, as you know it very well.

Learn from this that running away from the Lord is poor business. He can send out a storm, and hedge up your way on the deep, as well as to send afflictions to those on the land. The path of obedience is the only safe path. The young man who thinks to have a splendid time in worldly pleasure, will find that the devil takes his money, and leaves him at a poor stopping place. The police station, the poor house, the jail, the prison, yea, and sometimes the gallows, is where the devil sometimes lands those who run away from God.

Going down into the belly of hell was not a very comfortable place for Jonah, but this was what paying his fare to Tarshish led to. Look through the land and see what miserable human wrecks appear on every side. What has led to it? Once their conscience was enlightened, once they were impressed to choose the right course, once the Lord told them to go to Nineveh and preach, or do something for him, but they refused, they grieved the Spirit, they thought to escape duty, they paid their fare to Tarshish —to the circus, the theatre, the dance, the horse race, the billiard saloon, or the house of ill fame, and where are they? Where has the devil landed them? What road are they travelling on? Where will they land at last?

There are only two places for the two classes—heaven and hell. Obedience to God lands in heaven, disobedience to God lands in hell. The backslider carries a little of hell inside of him, but if he keeps on he will find hell all around him, where there is "weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth." Where are you bound? Who are you serving? What will be your destiny. Repent now. Salvation is of the Lord.

THE MUSTARD SEED.

DEAR BRO. BURR:—I wish you would explain through the A. C. Times the parable of the mustard seed. In what sense is it compared to the kingdom of heaven? and when was it sown? and when did it become a tree and fill the earth? C. C.

This parable evidently represents the planting of a dispensational truth, and its effects among men. The dispensational truth concerning the kingdom of God was preached by John the Baptist as a forerunner, was revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ, who was "the truth," and it was the beginning of the work of God in teaching men the "mystery of godliness." All previous work had been to regulate the fleshly conduct of mankind by the power of the Spirit of God, but now God proposed to regulate or change the heart of man by infusing his own Spirit within, and so produce a spiritual life that should eventually be clothed with immortality.

To do all former works he could use patriarchs and prophets, but for this he must send his own Son from heaven. He must close up the works of the flesh and introduce the works of the Spirit. He must close up the kingdoms of this world and introduce the kingdom of God. Hence he plants a seed, and that seed is Christ. As the seed of a plant contains the germ of the future development, so Christ contained the germ of the kingdom of God. Hence, in speaking of the kingdom of God, Jesus spoke of himself, and of his increase. John the Baptist said, "he must increase, but I must decrease."

The whole kingdom of God was in Jesus Christ. To get into Christ is to get into the kingdom, and have an inheritance therein. Hence, Christ is the mustard seed of the parable. Let us regard the different ideas of the parable.

"Sown in the earth." Christ, the Son of God, left the Father and came into the world. "The Word became flesh." This was the sowing of the mustard seed.

"Less than all the seeds." Compared with monarchs, governors, and titled men, Jesus was "of no reputation." His birth, his connections, his unassuming meekness, were all against him. "He was despised and rejected of men." Although he did many mighty works, yet the rulers demanded a sign of leadership ere they would acknowledge him. They wished to see evidence of his kingly power, and he told them that but one sign of this should be given—that of the prophet Jonah. He would conquer death and hell, and deliver his people therefrom; but the rulers were more anxious for deliverance from the Romans than from death and hell, and they rejected him. He was not great enough for them.

"But . . . it groweth up." Notwithstanding it was so small there was life there, and growth revealed it. The earthly existence was destroyed, but God gave it a body as pleased him, even a spiritual body because the seed was spiritual, and Jesus raised from the dead is the first fruit of the harvest. But the mustard seed is still growing. Jesus as the germ of the kingdom is still enlarging. Additions are still being made to the church, which is the representative of Christ on earth, and therefore the only representation of the kingdom of God during the present dispensation.

"Greater than all herbs." So the spreading of Christ's work is enlarging his church, and producing his fruit. It is unequalled. Its power is recognized abroad, although it began in obscurity and ignominy.

"The fowls of the air may lodge." So under its defense of righteousness, under its protecting shadow, many seek a shelter from the heat. Many that have nothing to do with the church still may use it for a protection. The fowls may be clean or unclean birds, but they often find the mustard seed plant a good shelter for a time. So men use the church as a protection when they otherwise would be exposed to unpleasant attacks.

Thus far the parable goes with the work of God. Jesus preached present truth, that which is the work of this dispensation. He preached the kingdom of God in its present condition, but sometimes alluded also to its complete condition when it should be established on the earth as a finished work.

Our brother asks "When it became a tree and filled the earth." This is not mentioned in the parable. Jesus did not say it filled the earth. He only represented the growth of the plant, as the greatest among herbs. The time is coming when God will set up his everlasting kingdom, and endue it with power, but this is the work of a future dispensation, and therefore this parable does not embrace it. That time will not be a planting or growing time, but with the tree already grown God will thrash the earth, destroy all things that offend, and then God's kingdom shall fill or occupy the whole earth.—Adv. Chris. Times.

THE END OF THE WORLD.

If the body's death seems to teach the lesson that modesty is becoming to the scientific speculator, what shall we say as to the prospects of that material frame which is beyond ourselves—the general orderly frame of the universe as we see it around us? People would suppose, from the way in which men talk now, that there was not the slightest chance of any great organic change ever coming across the outward world in which we live. No doubt God works by fixed laws. No doubt the world goes on morning and evening, and summer and winter; but what reason have you to suppose that it will go on so to infinity? Have no great catastrophes befallen the world before now? Does not physical science itself speak of these catastrophes? What is there to prevent other catastrophes, produced by the operation of laws of which at present we are very ignorant, coming athwart the globe on which we live, and a complete change taking place in the relations in which things even in the outward world stand at present, so that in the scriptural sense of the word there may be an end to the world, as there is most certainly to be an end of our earthly life.

To be sure, things have gone on for a long time in the same way, but is that any proof that they are to go on in the same way forever? You arise morning after morning in good health and strength, and seem to say to yourself for a time that this will last forever; but one morning something happens, you cannot explain what; the best physician in the world cannot tell you what; but something has happened that lays you on a bed of sickness, and in two days sends you off to your grave a corpse. Will the experience of the reality of the way in which everything has gone on since you were young, till you have attained maturity, save you from that great mischance?

Again, men for centuries had ranged over the mountains in Campagna; they thought that all would go on there, herds and flocks feeding, and vineyards growing as they had done for centuries; and suddenly there was a strange sound heard, and a volcano burst forth, and the greatest philosopher of the age came to look at it, and lost his life while he was looking. But neither he nor any of the men who had speculated with him ever expected that these great cities were to be swept to destruction, and their beautiful pastures to become for a time an arid wilderness. I do not say that such instances explain or tell us distinctly that such catastrophes will befall the whole globe; but at all events, I think they ought to make us modest, seeing that the wisest know so very small a portion of the laws that regulate God's creation. Surely we may not dogmatically assume that such catastrophes are beyond the range of possible or probable events.

It is true, I say, things have gone on for a long time, and men say, "Where is the promise of his coming, for all things continue as they were from the beginning of the world?" But still with him, with whom one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day, there may be changes maturing which no philosopher of the present or of any previous age has ever dreamed of, which will bring this great catastrophe to the globe, which will answer, on the whole outward creation, to something as great as is our passage from life to death, and what is beyond it. I do not think there is anything fanciful in such an expectation. I believe that a man, of that modest mind which is the characteristic of true science, will hesitate before he pronounces with any assurance that such a change may not come over the world as has been distinctly predicted in the Scriptures.—Dr. Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury.

HOLD MY HAND.

My Savior, hold my hand,
The night is drawing on;
The way is rough and dark,
'Tis long unto the dawn;
Without thee, 'tis a weary land,
My Savior, hold my hand.

My Saviour, hold my hand,
The enemy is near,
And seeks to have my soul;
With thee I shall not fear.
Jesus, I by thy strength shall stand,
My Saviour, hold my hand.

My Savior, hold my hand,
Strong is my grasp on thee;
I feel that I am safe,
If thou art leading me;
I follow with thy chosen band,
My Savior, hold my hand.

My Savior, hold my hand,
I feel myself so weak;
But confident am I
Whene'er I hear thee speak;
Lead me a way that thou hast planned—
My Savior, hold my hand.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

While at Haverhill, N. H., protracting a meeting under the New Hampshire Mission Tent, the power of God was made manifest in many ways, but in one case very marked. A man in the place by the name of S. C. Leazer, who had an impediment in his speech (a stammerer from his birth), was miraculously healed. The circumstances of the case are as follows:

He had a horse he was training for the race course, and was expecting to take him, but something told him to go to meeting. One night he went, and then continued to go. One Tuesday night when we were inviting persons forward for prayers, we said, "Why don't you come?" He says a very strange feeling came over him, that he could not move, neither could he all the time we were at prayers. He says, "I would be a christian, but I could not tell it, could not talk, I should make a fool of myself; and should I not say anything, they would say I was a hypocrite." He said it was with the greatest difficulty that he got home that night.

The next morning he arose, and in giving directions to his help (he employed a number of men), one man said to him, "Your voice has changed, you do not stammer." He says, "I had to tell him it was God's work." He went from this place to North Haverhill where we had meetings, and here he made a start. He also went to Whitefield where we had meetings, and here he told what God had done. He gave God all the glory. He said the fast horse could go to tell the story.

He could talk as well as anyone when we last saw him, and before he could hardly say anything. He requested that we make this statement in print, and also tell it wherever we went.

God shows his power when it is for his glory. R. F. & M. J. CLARK.

SANCTIFICATION.

"We fear that just at this point many miss their way. If the work of entire sanctification may be the end of a line of progressive sanctification they infer that it cannot be instantaneous. This we doubt not is a dangerous mistake. A traveler may reach a point which lies near him by going round the globe to get to it, and every step may be precisely along a line that will bring him to it, but the journey will be a great waste of time and force; he might have reached it by a single step the day he started. We doubt not it is so in this case.

There is no intelligent christian that does not believe that advances in ripeness and holiness may be more or less rapid, varying from the slowest and most tedious to the most vigorous and swiftest paces. This given, the problem is to find the quickest possible attainment. That the earliest possible attainment of the end is most desirable, we must believe. Three months sufficed to bring Israel from Egypt into the promised Canaan; they were forty years on the journey. It was their sin that they were so many times sick and weary and foot sore and heart sore when they might have been over the Jordan, feasting on the grapes of Eshcol and the choicest fruits of Engedi; and more yet when they might have been driving out of their heritage the enemies of the Lord.

Are we right then in this conception of the possibility of immediate attainment? Not denying that we may progress by slow approaches and reach the goal after a long journey, may we accelerate the motion and diminish the time? That this is possible we can no more doubt than we can question the former. Sad indeed will be the mistake if any should imagine that because they may progress by insensible degrees, therefore there is no need of haste; a sadder still if they should conclude that there is no possibility of attainment at once."—Bishop Foster.

BY the way many people in society waste their passing time, one would think that they expected to live eternally.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. McLaughlin.

A few words to those who love the Lord and his glorious appearing. I want to acknowledge his goodness, as well as entreat for his favors. I have been trying for many years to do the will of our Father, and trying to hold myself in readiness for the coming of Jesus. I am an invalid, and seldom have the privilege of meetings or christian society; yet in many respects I am highly favored of the Lord, for I realize that our heavenly Father watches over us all for good. For a short time it has been forcibly pressed upon my mind that I must write and tell of God's merciful dealings with us.

My husband (Harvey McLaughlin) was sixty-three years old last January, and had used tobacco for over fifty years, it being recommended by a physician for water-brash; but it never cured it. This fifteenth day of Oct., 1875, is sixteen months since the Lord gave him the glorious victory over a habit so long indulged in, that it was impossible for any poor mortal to overcome it; but our kind, merciful, sympathizing, heavenly Father, who is not willing that any should perish, gave the victory. Glory to his name! The pure in heart will rejoice with us. He says he never enjoyed himself so well in his life, as he has since he got the victory, although afflictions came and disappointments. Only three days after, he hurt his uncle very badly, so that he was laid up, lost his place and means of support. Since then, we have been in rather straitened circumstances, but Father has seen to it that we have not lacked for daily bread.

I must tell you how the Lord condescended to reason with him. He was hired as a watchman in the machine shop of Sweet & Co., Dansville, N. Y. Every half hour he had to go through the establishment to see if everything was all right through the night. This left him part of the time for reading, meditation and prayer. He wanted to be an honest-hearted christian, but there was that filthy, ruining habit, and no unclean thing can enter that holy city. He had tried to break off the winter before, but his brain was so confused he could not perform his task. He had to yield again; but when the Lord takes hold, then there is victory, and he will do it every time if we only yield without reserve and let him do it.

On the night of the 19th of June, 1874, the Lord condescended to reason with him. He was about to take a chew of tobacco, when the impression came as forcibly as if he had heard an audible voice, "That is a nasty, filthy habit." His reply was, I know it is. "Then why not give it up?" Well, I guess I will when I use up this half pound. "But you may not live to use it." Well, I guess I will take this chew. "No, you must stop now, or never." But I have used it for over fifty years, and it is going to be a hard stent. I have tried it several times, and I cannot. "But my grace shall be sufficient for you." Lord, if thy grace shall be sufficient for me, I will quit it. He put the chew back in the paper, and has never tasted it since. The Lord has given him the complete victory. Praise his holy name, and trust him for ever.

Dansville, N. Y.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

Dear Brn. and Sisters in Jesus:—I have often been asked of late, through letters, and personally, why I have not written more for the Crisis? I will try and tell you. It is not because I do not want to add my mite in giving words of cheer, if so I can do; but I have been poorly all the autumn. My sufferings have been very severe indeed, some of the time terribly so; and then times, as you all know, are hard, and I have had some work that I have tried to do to save expense. While I have lain here, doing a little at a time, and then resting, reading a little, working a little, and praying a good deal, I have been blest with the Spirit of God, and with sweet and encouraging promises, brought to mind often by the Spirit. When in terrible distress and pain Jesus has helped me, and kept me from murmuring or complaining at my extreme sufferings, which I have so constantly borne for long, weary years. Never, in all my christian course, have I felt more like bearing all things for Jesus' sake, than now. Though it may look dark at times, and clouds shut out the sunshine, I have learned that then is just the time to rest and trust, and walk by faith, and not by sight. There is no other way of living in peace and quiet, save only to rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him. If ever I loved the work of the Lord, it is now. If ever I wanted to see Jesus, and be made like him, it is now. I often feel homesick, but with Jesus' help I will wait patiently till he comes. Dear ones, pray for me. I need your earnest prayers. Write me words of hope and cheer. God bless you all.

No. Dana, Mass., Oct. 18th, 1875.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Dear Brn. and Srs. of like precious faith, who are bound with me to the home of the blest, where the inhabitants will never say they are sick; may grace, mercy and peace be with you and abide with you till time shall be no more. I sat musing to-day, and thinking of the many that would assemble for worship; and also of the many that seldom have the privilege, and I thought what a great company would one day meet together, not in separate meetings, as now, but all in one place. They will not be called by the tolling of the bell, as now, but an angel, with a great sound of a trumpet, shall gather them from one end of heaven to the other. Precious hour to the believer. Yes, thrice blessed to all who have been looking, watching, and waiting. But none are waiting till they are ready. Those who travel, know something what it is to be ready and waiting for the cars, and what it would be to be left; and yet, if left at that time, they are in hopes to go on the next train. But not so in this case; for when once the Master of the house is risen up, and shut to the door, it will be in vain to seek for admittance. And now, whilst the gospel train is waiting to take all on board, my soul is pained to see so many refuse. We are glad of the chance to invite them; glad that there is mercy in store; but soon it will be said, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved."

O come, dear sinner, whilst time and mercy linger, and be saved to-day, that you may be saved eternally. Come, you that have left your first love, and rally once more to the cross of Christ. Come, my dear Brn. and Srs., gird on the armor more closely. We have but a little longer to wage war with the enemy.

Hotchkissville, Ct., Oct. 17th, 1875.

From Bro. C. C. Plummer.

Perhaps it would be interesting to the many readers of the Crisis to hear from this back town up in New Hampshire. This is the place where the N. H. Mission tent was pitched by Bro. Enoch Morrill in 1873, and a large amount of good was done. Many hard-hearted ones acknowledge their dependence upon an independent God. Some have continued to speak of the goodness of God publicly, while others have grown cold-hearted. This may be owing to this one fact; we have not been favored with meetings during the past summer. What this people need is a settled pastor, to look after the wandering ones; but like many other back towns, the inhabitants are not wealthy enough to maintain a pastor, unless he be a man that would be willing to work lightly with his hands, and at the same time proclaim the "glad tidings of great joy."

This unpopular doctrine was first proclaimed to this people by Sister L. E. Saulpaugh, invited by Bro. B. E. Pillsbury, who has done much to carry forward this good work. But as in other places, they have had a good deal to contend with, which was very unpleasant. We are trusting that the Lord, in his own good time, may send some one this way who has the real cause at heart. Pray for us, that we may have, as in days gone by, sweet communion with our God.

Canterbury, N. H.

WORRY.—Believers have rest. God gives them this great comfort. Worry comes from doubt. It nearly always arises from foreboding evils that never come, or doubting promises that are sure. Usually, neither joys nor sorrows are what we anticipate. Why not wait, then, till they come? The present is all that we know with certainty, why then take thought for the future? David says, "I hate vain thoughts," and so should we. He means care, worry, just what our Savior means by "Take no thought for the morrow." Forecasting is well if seasoned with trusting; looking ahead is proper if we look in hope, and allow for unseen results. Our greatest griefs are unexpected; our very highest joys break suddenly upon our hearts.

The connection of divine agency with human action is such that no one can forecast the future exactly. Often, what we most fear is changed to blessing, and what promised highest pleasure drives thorns to our hearts. Will worry make one hair black or white? It whitens hair without cause, excludes peace where the Lord would give it, exhausts life where rest is offered, creates evils out of good, begets fear where no fear is lawful, prevents blessings that are sent to our doors, consumes energies needed to win success, invites enemies that hope would repel, grieves the Spirit, and hinders his gracious helpfulness.—Ex.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SLEEP.

We cannot have health without having a plenty of good, refreshing sleep. It is something which must be secured, and which cannot be dispensed with except at great loss to ourselves. When persons cannot sleep, it is certain that they must rapidly use up their vital forces. The Scriptures inform us that God "giveth his beloved sleep." And this God-given blessing is not to be despised. As long as we can sleep well, we have evidence that in some important particulars at least, the machinery of life is still in comparative good order. We must not count that time lost that is spent in refreshing sleep. It is thus alone that we can renew and preserve our energies for the work which we have to do.

Some persons are natural sluggards, as others are natural gluttons. The sluggard knows nothing of good sleep. He is to be pitied for his evil habits which lead him to waste his time in bed which he ought to spend in industrious labor. Laziness is something to be shunned as we would shun vice. But the disease is so nearly incurable that it will not be at this time taken in hand.

But we have a few words of counsel to those who are in danger from overwork. If you would avoid breaking down, be sure to get plenty of sleep. We do not advise you to lie in bed in the morning. But we urge that whenever it is reasonable you retire early and compose your mind to quiet rest. If it be difficult to sleep, it is a proof that you have already begun to exhaust your nervous system, and should cause you to feel determined that this state of things shall be changed. Some things will help you to sleep. Of these we name, 1. A good conscience. 2. The spending of the day in something useful. 3. Keeping the soul from fretting and murmuring. 4. The habit of early rising. 5. The use of food that is hygienic, and abstinence from all other. 6. Never to eat supper. 7. To have your beds composed of that only which should be their proper materials. 8. To have plenty of sunlight in your sleeping room by day, and to have sufficient ventilation while it is occupied.

If you are still troubled with inability to sleep, you will find a sponge bath before retiring an excellent preparation for quiet and refreshing sleep. It is not the business of life to sleep. No, by no means. Life is full of responsible duties that call for active, painful labor. But to perform these we must have a sufficient amount of good sleep. See to it that this is secured every night, if possible; and when you fail to get it because of duties that cannot be put off, take your ealiest opportunity to make up the lack. You need not be afraid to work with zealous energy so long as you are able to secure a plenty of refreshing sleep.—Health Reformer.

MOTHERS, DON'T FRIGHTEN YOUR CHILDREN.

We have more than once seen a woman into whose hands a child had been given to love and to rear, who never even once imagined that when she screamed at the sight of a venturesome mouse, or the graceful spinning down of a spider, or a flash of lightning, that she so shocked the nerves of her child, and so deeply thrilled them, that they were never fully at peace again. The scream that she utters may leave no visible wound in the body of her little one, but the hurt is none the less severe, and the pain will return again and again to it whenever it sees the small and very likely harmless insect which suggested to its mother the terror which she transferred to her child. We have seen a mother gather her children into a bed at mid-day and lie trembling with dread of a lightning flash, until she has made the young lives of her family a burden to them whenever there is promise of a summer storm. Of course there is danger during an electric disturbance, but it is very remote, and the number of those who contract a fatal illness through carelessness when their clothing has got wet in a peaceful rain is ten times as great as of those killed by lightning, and yet a mother is often very negligent of this exposure. She may tell her children that the centre of the room, with the windows and doors closed, if there be no chimney in the apartment, is a safer place than a door-way or an open casement; but she need not frighten them by manifest timidity.

The time of real danger she should make one of very serious use to her little ones by showing them the value of cool self-possession, prompt action, or heroic patience. Ignorant fears are more likely to be perpetuated in a child by a thoughtless mother than is a discreet knowledge of how to avoid danger. A child that will climb to the roof's top or the eaves' edge, will often fear to pass through a room alone if it be told that a mouse is in it, and this little gray mischief was never known to attack anybody. A worm is unpleasant to look upon, but it is not an active enemy to mankind, and it should only be avoided in the presence of a child just as we would avoid contact with any other disagreeable object. There are children who live in such perpetual dread of some of the most innocent of little creatures, that their health is often seriously impaired, and their slumbers are frequently a misery and an injury to them, from the appalling dreams which are the consequence of being frightened by a silly mother. The really earnest and tender woman will inform herself and her child of all the real dangers that are likely to surround it, and she will wisely guard it and show it how and when to guard itself.—The Metropolitan.

WHY SHE REFUSED.

You say you went to a party last night, and you saw Mrs. Smith, an old friend whom you had not seen since she and your sister were at school together. You had a very pleasant talk until supper, when you gave her your arm and took her to supper. When some one came along with a few glasses of wine on a waiter and offered her a glass, you shudder as she said, "No." and you wondered why Mrs. Smith, who didn't use to be particular about such things, not only refused, but shuddered when she said no. You cannot tell why? I can tell you why. You went on with your talk, and had a little flirtation, did you? I won't say you didn't. She was very gay, and seemed very glad to forget herself, did she? Very well; I am glad you gave her that hour of the evening.

I can tell you where she went after the party was over. She went home—the latest person from the party. She was glad it was late, for her husband had not come home. She sat and read for an hour and her husband did not come. She wrote for an hour, and he did not come. At length, between three and four o'clock, there was a noise at the door. She went to the door and two policemen held him in their arms. She knows them both well by this time. It happens so often that she knows every policeman on the beat. They bade her good night. She brought him in. She had locked her children's room that he might not abuse them. She took the abuse as he flung himself on the bed. She dragged off his neck-cloth and coat, and sat there until he should fall into his stupid sleep.

She was the woman who refused the glass of wine with a shudder. You did not know the story. You thought she was gay and bright. I know her story, because I am her minister. They have a sort of skeleton in the closet, which we are permitted to see and you are not. And when we see that skeleton, do you wonder that we sometimes say pretty sharp things about moderate drinking, and the temptations offered at parties?—Rev. E. E. Hale.

THE EVILS OF TOBACCO.

The Rev. Dr. Cox, whose speech is "always with grace seasoned with salt," gives us an amusing touch on the manner in which he abandoned his cigar:

"From fifteen to thirty, I am ashamed to say, I smoked. My conscience often upbraided me, as well as my best earthly friend. Still I made excuses. My physician, a smoker, helped me to some; and so I continued, till once, on board a steamer, a drunken gentleman, who felt and claimed a fuliginous brotherhood to me, though I recollected him not at all, came strutting up to me, and bringing his grog-smoked fumes almost into contact with my mouth, said, with tuneful eructation, 'Give me a-a-l-ight, Dr. Cox!' I handed him my cigar—he returned it—I threw it overboard; and since that have been enabled to keep myself from so foul and odious a sin! Since then—thirty-four years ago, last September—I have felt ingenuously pained at the sight of smoking, chewing, snuffing."—Anti-Tobacco Journal.

ZIONWARD.

JOHN LYLE.

O Savior, look on me,
A traveler Zionward;
The wilderness is lone and dreary,
And I am faint, foot-sore, and weary,
Do thou my prayer regard.

Thanks, Lord, for the blest thought,
Thou hast this pathway trod;
An angel came to strengthen thee,
When prostrate in Gethsemane,
Bathed in thy precious blood!

Through suffering thou wast made
A Leader and a Shield
To give thy church a guiding hand,
And bring her to Immanuel's land,
Where glory is revealed.

How blessed is thy Word,—
"Cheer up, I've overcome."
I'll still pursue the royal way,
Thy pillar shines by night and day,
'Twill lead me safely home.

Press forward, then, my soul,
A few more toils and tears!
Urge on thy way, each tempter scorning,
For lo, the dawn of Zion's morning
Upon thy path appears!

SCIENCE AND THE SECOND ADVENT.

"There shall come in the last days scoffers, saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

In modern times there has arisen a school of thought which turns the reasoning of the scoffer into an axiom of pretended science, and makes the constancy of the laws of nature its plea for setting aside the great hope of the Christian church, and denying the solemn certainties of the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

The creed of the scoffer implies that the laws of nature exist of themselvss, without the fact of a supreme Lawgiver, and that all things continue and must continue as they have been from the creation, because there is no power capable of suspending or reversing the firm and settled course of things. Ungodly science will clothe its icy creed with the flowers of fancy and speak elegantly of a power which

"Warms in the sun; refreshes in the breeze;
Glows in the stars, and blossoms in the trees;
Lives through all life; extends through all extent;
Spreads undivided; operates unspent."

But belief in a living God is rejected. Now, it is plain that the scientific theory, that the course of nature admits of no disturbance, is fatal to the reception of those great doctrines which Scripture prophecy proclaims. . . . The maxims of pretended science, add the lively hope of the Lord's coming, cannot dwell together in the same heart.

But since perverted science will dare to set itself up against the revealed warnings of Jehovah, the apostle ventures boldly into her domain, wrests her own weapons from her puny grasp, and turns them into arrows to pierce the conscience, and alarm the stout-hearted sinner into repentance and godly fear. The heavens and the earth which are now, are "stored with fire," he tells us, "against a day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. The agencies do not require to be created, which the Almighty will employ, to clear the earth from the dominion of evil, and introduce the promised kingdom of righteousness and peace. From Adam to Noah the waters were already in existence, by which the flood was brought on the world of the ungodly, and when once the signal was given, and the windows of heaven were opened, and the fountains of the great deep broken up, they came forth spontaneously to do the bidding of him who had treasured them against the time of judgment.

And so also, from Noah until now, the heavens and the earth are already stored with treasures of fire, which are ready to execute the threatenings, and to fulfil the counsel of the Almighty.

"What is creation else
But a capacious reservoir of means,
Wrought by his will, and ready for his use?"

What is the secret of the two main discoveries which have stamped their character on the present age of advanced science and eager enterprise?

LATENT HEAT AND ELECTRICITY.

But these watchwords of science, the talisman of her power, by which she has wrought wonders, suggest a deeper meaning to thoughtful ears. All creation, yes, every drop of water, as science in her triumphs is compelled to bear witness, is stored with treasures of secret fire, and one of her latest conclusions, after full research, is that the hidden electricity of each single drop of rain is equal to the production of a violent thunder storm.

All creation, then, down to each dewdrop and blade of grass, is stored with the hidden fire of electricity; and it needs but one touch from the finger of the Almighty, one secret, imperceptible change of its laws, or even, perhaps, without a change of law, some foreseen and foreappointed accumulation of its hidden powers, to produce a tempest of fire that would consume the whole human race, and completely change all the physical features of the planet on which we live. It is a childish science which treats such a catastrophe as impossible and incredible. It is a proud and stout-hearted folly, which, having merely wetted its feet in the spray of the great ocean of natural laws, pretends to have sounded their unfathomable depths, and dares, in the confidence of its own foresight, to reject the solemn warnings of a judgment to come.

But perhaps some may urge that the long period which has elapsed since these warnings were given, and given as of an event near at hand, may well abate our confidence in their truth, and justify the doubting inquiry—"Where is the promise of his coming?" Have not sixty generations passed away with no trace of Messiah's return, though the first generation of believers were taught to expect it in their own lifetime? Here, too, the apostle supplies us with an answer. The length of the delay confirms, instead of weakening, the certainty of the judgment.

This is the time of God's long-suffering. And just as, in the history of Joseph, seven years of plenty were purposely given, because the famine that would follow would be intense and severe, so also it is part of the wisdom of God, that a judgment, solemn beyond all example, should be introduced by the richest, freest, fullest, and and most enduring display of grace and forbearance towards sinners. This is the true secret of the calm constancy of the laws of nature, and the silent course of sixty generations of mankind since the Son of God returned to the bosom of the Father from which he came.

This long-suffering of God is our salvation. It is by this long delay that his elect are gathered in, and the message of the gospel is sent to the utmost bounds of the human family. But the time will come when the voice will go forth from the throne in heaven, saying, "It is done," and the mysterious delays of grace be followed by the hour of open judgment. Rev. 16.

We have many signs around us which may well lead us to the conclusion that this judgment, so long delayed, is near at hand. The gospel is once more being preached in all the world, for a witness to all nations. The fig-tree begins to blossom in the new awakening among the Jewish people, and the numerous converts who have been gathered from among them into the fold of Christ. Matt. 24: 14, 32, 33.

The moral conflict which has been carried on for ages, first between Christianity and heathen idolatry, Popery and Mohammedanism—enemies without and secret corruption within—is passing over into the East again. And if the evil passions of mankind come to be once more unchained after a long peace, by the sounds of war, who can tell what bitter fruits of a rejected gospel may reveal themselves in these last days of Gentile dominion? In our own favored nation we hear almost daily the sorrowful report of hateful crimes, that should make us blush with shame, and tremble with fear, lest Sodom itself should rise against us in judgment, to condemn our more aggravated abuse of mercy.

And if once the hateful infection of infidelity should spread more widely through all christian lands, so that the gospel be rejected with scorn by sensual profligates and covetous oppressors, or philosophical unbelievers, and Christianity itself be regarded as a worn-out and worthless thing, a secret voice will then be addressed by the God of holiness to his waiting people: "Come, my people, enter into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the world for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." Isa. 26: 20, 21.

How solemn is this certainty of a judgment to come, when once we realize the true force of the divine warning! The laws of nature, though sure and constant, are not so sure and unchangeable as that perfection of the Almighty Lord of Providence which involves the moral necessity of a coming day of retribution. The stars in their silent course are measuring out, one by one, the appointed hours of merciful delay. The heavens and earth which are now, are stored with treasures of fire, against the season when the Lord shall come out of his secret hiding place, and call to the heavens and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

Beyond it there is a vista of eternal bliss and glory to all the children of God, and ages of recovered beauty and holiness to our fallen world. But before that glory can dawn, there is a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, and strange and fearful judnments to the workers of iniquity. O how needful to be sheltered in that hour, and to have the blood of the true Passover sprinkled upon the lintels of our hearts, that the destroying angel may pass by. Prophets long ago, have trembled in themselves, that they might rest in the day of trouble.—Rainbow.

A cobbler at Leyden, who used to attend the public disputations held at the academy, was once asked if he understood Latin.

"No," replied the mechanic, "but I know who is wrong in the argument."

"How?" replied his friend.

"Why, by seeing who is angry first."

In our discussions, brethren, touching the sacred things of God, and the unity of his church, let us always bear in mind the cobbler of Leyden.

Every nature must have the sub-soil ploughing of sorrow before it can recognize its present poverty or its possible wealth.

CONFESSION OF HOLINESS.

No minister, no christian, no man, even, will admit that he cherishes any opposition to holiness, per se, that is, to the thing itself, as a personal excellence. The very worst men have an intellectual approbation of purity. It is so fitting, so exalting and necessary in all the pursuits and relations of life, that the quality commends itself to the acceptance and favor of all men.

It is a singular fact that bad men will laud purity and virtue in persons, whom they would corrupt, and then despise. It is one of the contradictions in poor, fallen human nature. It will ensnare innocence and murder fidelity, solely on account of its persistence and inflexibility; but if it yield, and consent to the loss of its integrity, then the character so despoiled is loaded with execrations, and consigned to the shades of infamy. Sin is both inconsistent and cruel. It is essentially mean; it reeks with perfidy.

But while anthems are sung to the praise of holiness as an abstraction, a visionary ideality or a property of "the coming man," yet the confession of it, as an attained experience, provokes repugnance, criticism, and sometimes abuse and raillery. Nor is this aversion and ill temper confined to flagrant sinners. It festers strangely in the heart of the moral, the amiable, the discreet; and more strangely still, lurks delusively among the clustering flowers of christian graces. Like a serpent coiled among the roots and drooping branches of beauty and fragrance, it lies concealed among the affections of a true, believing heart. And when attack is to be made, it seeks the most vulnerable point, which is not intrinsic holiness, but the confession of it. Serpent-like it strikes where it will kill. Holiness as a principle in invincible, but profession can be easily slurred, and this too, with apparent concern, lest religion degenerate into delusion, cant, and hypocrisy.

Thus spiritual sanctification is shot through and through—shot dead—in many a pulsing heart, by the critic, under a self complacent and pious persuasion, that he has only put a few bullet holes through broad and brazen phylacteries, that he has only punctured sanctimonious arrogance, and flaunting pretensions. Nor must we judge these censors too harshly, for two reasons.

1. It must be allowed confession has no necessary connection with a thorough work. It may be hypocritically simulated, or spring from a sincere mistake.

2. There is a gentle reproof and seeming assumption inherent in a personal confession of holiness, just as there is in an asserted uplift and superiority in justification and adoption. The implication in the latter case is that the witness, unlike the common mass of impenitent sinners, has ceased to be a child of the devil, and has become a child of God. So in sanctification, there is involved a claim to higher moral excellence, which makes a difference between the present and former state of the subject of it, and consequently a disparity between him and those who still neglect this great salvation. And this fact explains why believers are often more sensitive in the presence of confession than the unconverted. The unconverted makes no pretensions to religion, and therefore his state cannot suffer by comparison; but the justified man is a professor, and hence just in proportion as higher experiences are spoken of, his attainments are shown to be incomplete and defective. Here is the rub; no man likes to have the par value of his religion called in question. Nor does he relish the idea that he has a scant measure as compared with other people. He will accept the charge of shallow piety, with much real or affected humility, if the same judgment be applied without discrimination to all other professing christians.

But let a true exponent of the higher life and thorough cleansing be placed in competition with him, and a spirit of exaltation personal to himself, and of detraction as regards his fellows, will be immediately evolved. This leveling disposition proceeds on the envious principle of the man who said "he did not care if he had lost all his hay by the rain, his neighbors had lost theirs too." It is the old diabolical jealousy that drags angels down, rather than pay the price which would lift him to the same sublime and beatific elevation. How mortifyingly and culpably has this trait been revealed since the recent awakening on the subject of sanctification began in this country.

Holiness as a mute abstraction, or outward life of morality and devotion, has found a thousand advocates and panegyrisis. But the claim that a marvelous heart-work, in advance of justification may be realized, and especially the confession of a living witness that through faith in the blood of Jesus, he has reduced the possibilities of divine grace to an experimental verity—"Oh, that is ostentation," "empyrean professions," "a pharisaic claim that he is holier than thou," "it is creating caste," "engendering division," "running wild on one idea," "destroying the symmetry of the gospel, and developing rickety christians."

This whole bill of exceptions may be resolved into the following absurdities, "Be ye holy," but do not "forage after sanctification;" "grow in grace, but remember there is no 'residue' of sin after conversion to be grown out of you;" "ye are my witness, saith the Lord;" and so ye are; but you must not say anything scarcely of what you know in giving your testimony. "You must let your light shine, but that light should gleam through the media of your pocket, your morality, your benevolence, and your regularity at church and your devotional attitudes, and yet not so as to make you singular in your person, your home, your church, or your social habits and intercourse." That is, you must be an opaque luminary, a mute witness, and a christian worldling. Let us rather "be holy," and then "witness a good confession."—Christian Standard.

"ETERNAL MISERY OF HELL."

D. K. BARRETT, JR.

The above is the heading of Tract No. 277 of the American Tract Society, by Rev. James Saurin, from which we extract the following:—"As God will aggravate the sufferings of the damned, by displaying his glorious attributes, their hatred of him will be unbounded. Their torment will excite their hatred; their hatred will aggravate their torment. Is not this the height of misery, to be filled with unmixed hate towards the perfect Being, the Supreme Being—the Sovereign Beauty?—in a word, to hate the Infinite God? Doth not this idea present to your mind a state the most melancholy, the most miserable? One chief excellence of the glory of happy spirits is a consummate love to their Creator. One of the most horrid punishments of hell is the exclusion of divine love. O miserable state of the damned! In it they utter as many blasphemies against God as the happy souls in heaven shout alleluiahs to his praise. These are the punishments of condemned souls. It remaineth only that we consider the length and duration of them."—S. Brewer, in "The History of an Immortal Soul."

Does the reader see how this can be in harmony with the Bible, and God's character as revealed there? "Justice and mercy are the habitation of thy throne," we read; yet here he is represented as employed to all eternity in aggravating the sufferings of creatures to whom he has given life, and is perpetuating it for that very purpose, instead of suffering them to cease to be, when they had failed of the end of life. According to this writer, justice will never be satisfied, but the sinner forever keeps the upperhands of justice, as it is meted out by the Almighty. "Their hatred will aggravate their torment." Thus to all eternity their anguish, yea, the depths of their woe, will be ever accumulating and multiplying. What immeasurable depths of excruciating torture and pain, in the progress of ages, they must suffer! and that still endlessly accumulating. Is this your God, so merciful, kind, loving, and just (?)!

Another (Mr. Benson) says: "They must be perpetually swelling their enormous sum of guilt, and still running deeper, immensely deeper in debt to divine and infinite justice. Hence, after the longest imaginable period, they will be so far from having discharged their debt, that they will find more due than when they first began to suffer." Then you see at once if this is true, for them to continue thus no way satisfies or serves the end of justice. Justice would, according to this testimony, be better served by the destruction, or ceasing to be of the sinner.

Does God hate sin, yet does he take measures to endlessly increase and perpetuate it, where no good end can be advanced thereby, too? Away with such inconsistency! Think what an enormous amount of sin must accumulate in the progress of ages. David says, "Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." Was this prayer contrary to the will of God?

Again, "Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be." Ps. 37: 10. "The day that cometh shall burn them up, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. 4: 1. "They shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Ps. 37: 20. "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3: 12. The fire cannot be stopped from accomplishing its work of reducing the wicked to "smoke" and "ashes." "The fire shall devour them." These are the Bible declarations. Do you believe them? They "shall be punished with everlasting destruction." 2 Thess. 1: 9. Not with everlasting torment. God will find better employment than in torturing his creatures forever. He has no pleasure even in the death of the wicked, but that he should turn from his way and live. But he has said, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy." This is our God's way of meting out justice in harmony with mercy.

President Edwards says: "The woes of sinners in hell will not be a cause of grief to the saints in heaven, but of rejoicing. This rejoicing will be the fruit of an amiable disposition, and a perfect holiness and conformity to Christ." Then Christ will be changed from what he was when he wept over Jerusalem, at their rejection of what belonged to their peace. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Matt. 23: 37. "The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel." But God is in harmony with himself. His goodness, love, and mercy, harmonize with justice. "Will not the Judge of all the earth do right?" "Thou wilt make them as a fiery oven in the day of thine anger; the Lord will swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them." Thus justice will be satisfied, and they receive a just recompense, which otherwise they would not. Besides, sin is got rid of, no more to be a stench to the Almighty. I say with David then, "Consume them in thy wrath, consume them, that they may not be." "As smoke is driven away, so drive them away. As wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish at the presence of God." "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." "Bless thou the Lord, O my soul."

THOUGHTS ON ANIMAL SACRIFICES.

Every reader of the Bible is familiar with the fact of animal sacrifices; and also with the fact that those sacrifices formed a very prominent and important part of the imposing ritual of divine worship for the nation of Israel. Beyond the recognition of these facts, and the belief that the purpose of these sacrifices was to prefigure the offering of the body of Jesus, who, in the end of the age, appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, comparatively few pay more attention to the subject. With the idea of exciting further interest, and of promoting correct apprehensions of the value and importance of these ordinances, we request the reader's attention to the following considerations on the origin of animal sacrifice.

The age in which we live is remarkable for various manifestations of mind; and one of these, not the least striking, is a desire to find an origin for everything elsewhere than in God. The mere mention of this truth is sufficient to call up before the mind many illustrations; and so, in accordance with this spirit of the age, we find the sacrifice of animals, as a religious rite, is assigned to a human origin. "Moses," say the men of advanced religious thought, "was a man skilled in all the knowledge and wisdom of the Egyptians; and with the idea of uniting and consolidating the Hebrews, whom he had rescued from the dominion of Pharaoh, into a distinctly separate people and nation, he instituted, among other things, the offering of slain beasts."

This hypothesis, like most of those emanating from the same quarter, is very plausible and very defective. It leaves the previous fact of animal sacrifices entirely unaccounted for. The question at once suggested by this hypothesis is, How did the Egyptians, and all other nations of antiquity, begin to offer these sacrifices? That is the matter to be accounted for. The only history we have accounting for the practice of animal sacrifice as a religious rite, by all ancient nations, is in the book of Genesis. At chapter 8, verse 20, we read: "Noah builded an altar unto the Lord; and took of every clean beast, and every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings upon the altar; and the Lord smelled a sweet savor." The history informs us that the descendants of this man Noah repeopled the whole earth. As the family of Noah were acquainted with the usage in question, it is only reasonable to believe that they would continue the practice in their families, and wherever they settled.

Here is an intelligible and sufficient cause for the wide diffusion of the practice of animal sacrifice, usage, and tradition. Along with the tradition, it is easy to conceive that corruptions and false notions of the purpose and nature of these sacrifices might come in.

Still, we want an answer to the question, How did the practice of animal sacrifice begin? Did it originate in the command of God, or by the suggestion of the human mind? Noah, at least, was not the inventor of the practice; for in Genesis 4: 2–7, we have an account of a much earlier observance of this rite: "Abel was a keeper of sheep, and Cain (his elder brother) was a tiller of the ground. And in process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord; and Abel also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering; but unto Cain he had not respect."

This is the earliest record of the offering of animal sacrifice to God we have. It is very early; still, we have to account for the fact—we want an answer to our inquiry, How, or why, did the practice originate? Did Abel offer the "firstling of his flock and fat thereof" by command of God; or was it simply a suggestion of his own mind? We have no positive deliverance in the Scriptures on this matter, and so are left to deduce our answer from all the circumstances described and the language used, regarding such offerings in these ancient documents.

Here it may be as well to state that the writer of these paragraphs is satisfied in his own mind that the only conclusion warranted by the circumstances, and capable of meeting all the requirements of the case, is, that the offering of animal sacrifices originated in the appointment of God—that their origin is divine. His reasons for so believing will appear as we proceed to examine the merits of the two hypothesis in regard to the origin of animal sacrifices, in the light of Holy Scripture and also of reason.

The advocates of a human origin for animal sacrifices are of two classes. One of these profess to receive the Bible as divine authority; the other sets it aside. We may have something to say to both parties; in the meantime, we address ourselves to those who, receiving the Scriptures as we do, attribute the origin of animal sacrifice to man himself.

Observe, then, first, that the Bible informs us that the sacrifices offered by Abel and Noah were acceptable to God. Of the latter it is testified that "the Lord smelled a sweet savor" (chap. 7: 21): a common mode of expressing the divine approval. Now, either these offerings were according to the appointment of God, or they were not. If they were not, then they were the product of will-worship. But the Bible informs us that the attempts to make such offerings acceptable to God is vain: "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" (Mark 7: 7; see also Col. 2: 18–23). Since, therefore, the offerings made by Noah and Abel were acceptable to God, we must conclude that they were not the production of human suggestion, but were in accordance with the appointment of God.

An able writer on this snbject has well remarked: "In religious institutions the Most High has ever been jealous of his prerogative. He alone is competent to prescribe the terms on which he will hold communion with sinful beings; and he regards as vain and presumptuous every pretence of honoring him which he hath not warranted. The sacrifice of blood and death, if an idea so revolting could have sprung up in a sinner's mind, could not have been offered to God without impiety, nor would he have accepted it had not his own authority previously pointed out the way by an explicit prescription."

The expression of the divine approval of Abel's offering is strongly marked, not only in Genesis, but also in the epistle to the Hebrews: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts." Heb. 11: 4. What are we to understand by the language, "Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain"—"by faith"? Evidently, not in the sense that Abel merely believed that his sacrifices would be accepted, while Cain did not. If Cain did not believe that his sacrifice would be acceptable to God, why did he present it?

There is every reason to conclnde that Cain expected his offering to be accepted, not only from the fact of his voluntarily presenting it, but also from the disappointment and displeasure he manifested at its non-acceptance. He "was very wroth, and his countenance fell." The faith that was wanting in Cain was, plainly, not faith in the acceptability of his offering, but in something else. Faith, according to the scriptural use of the term, supposes a testimony, promise, or command. It is indeed common to speak of intuitions, or simple impressions of the mind, as faith, but it is only fancy. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. 10: 17. The immediate context, whence the language under consideration is quoted, supplies illustrations. Thus: "By faith Noah, being warned of God, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterwards receive, went." "Through faith also, Sara received strength to conceive seed, . . . because she judged him faithful that promised." Heb. 11: 7, 8, 11.

In the cases mentioned of Noah, Abraham, and Sarah, their faith was not an intuitive suggestion, but an act of obedience to the command of God. Even so did Abel offer unto God a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain. The most "rational" conclusion in the circumstances is, that Abel offered that kind of sacrifice which had previously been appointed to be offered, while Cain presented one of his own choosing. Very likely, Cain was a "Rationalist;" and, guided by his "intuitions," he judged the produce of his fields a fitter offering than that from Abel's flocks. And to the human understanding, the offering of Cain—the fruit of the ground, wet with the dew of heaven—does seem a more pleasing present than a dead beast; and the more it does so, the stronger does the evidence appear in favor of the idea that the ground of acceptance for Abel and his offering was the appointment of God. The divine acceptance is proof of the divine appointment. There is another circumstance mentioned regarding Abel's offering which strongly corroborates the idea that it was according to divine appointment, viz., that he not only "brought of the firstlings of his flock," but, also, "of the fat thereof." Gen. 4: 4.

Now it is remarkable, that among the instructions given by Jehovah to Moses regarding the offering of animals in sacrifice, a very prominent one is that the fat is to be offered and burned. Of many examples which the reader will easily find for himself, we simply quote one: "And he shall offer thereof his offering, even an offering made by fire unto the Lord; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them. . . . And the priest shall burn them upon the altar; it is the food of the offering made by fire for a sweet savor; all the fat is the Lord's. It shall be a perpetual statute for your generations throughout all your dwellings, that ye eat neither fat nor blood." Lev. 3: 14–17.

In behalf of the theory of a human origin for the offering of animal sacrifices, it is urged that these offerings were, originally, the expression of gratitude to God by the devout worshippers. But if that were so, how are we to account for the special appointment of thank-offerings in the Levitical service? Such an appointment involves the idea that thanksgiving was not the common or ordinary object of these offerings.

Again: it seems from a "rational" point of view, a very irrational and unlikely suggestion to express gratitude to God by taking away the life of an innocent creature, without any express command from the great Proprietor;—very irrational indeed, to destroy the life which the beneficent Creator had given to a creatmre of his care, in order to express gratitude to him for preserving our own. Hence we find that the ancient philosophers of Greece not unfrequently expressed their astonishment how so strange a practice as animal sacrifice could have originated; and, on rational principles, thought their being pleasing to God an impossibility.

Others of the same school have supposed that these sacrifices originated in a friendly meal. But the accounts we have of the early saerifices will not confirm this hypothesis, because they were whole burnt-offerings. Thus we read in Gen. 7: 20, "Noah builded an altar unto the Lord, and took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings on the altar." See also chap. 22: 2, 7, 8, 13; Job 1: 5. In the book of Leviticus we have a description of the burnt-offering, and there we learn that the whole of the animal was consumed by fire; hence the term, "whole burnt-offering," or holocaust. There also we learn that this was the principal kind of sacrifice in the Mosaic ritual. It is plain, then, that while, in many cases, part of the animal offered in sacrifice was eaten, this was not always the case; and the fact that, in those early instances of sacrifice by Noah, Abraham, and Job, the whole animal was consumed by fire, renders the hypothesis of attributing the practice of animal sacrifice to a friendly meal entirely inadmissable.

Again: an interested priesthood has been regarded as the origin of the offering animal sacrifices, because of the large share of the carcase which became theirs. The inaccuracy of this supposition, not only from the facts already stated in the preceding paragraph regarding the nature of "burnt-offerings," but also from the fact that, in these early instances of the observance of this rite, the person who offered the animal was the owner of it; and surely he had nothing to gain by burning his own property to ashes. His interest lay all the other way,—the choice of his flock was selected and devoted to a purpose from which he could derive no apparent benefit. In view of such facts, it would be more rational to affirm that the practice of animal sacrifices originated the priesthood, than that the priests invented the sacrifices.

Here we would notice a common accusation of sceptics against religion, viz., that it owes its existence to a cunning and interested priesthood. Such an assertion provokes the inquiry, Who originated the priests? And the idea that a priesthood is the result of religion, and not its cause, has certainly much in its favor. It is true that physicians and surgeons gain a livelihood by the treatment of disease and bodily injury, and so far have a pecuniary interest in these evils; but no one would be so absurd as to affirm that physicians and surgeons invented accidents and diseases. And yet it would be no more inaccurate than to affirm that religion owes its existence to a priesthood. Pecuniary interest might lead officials to promote and preserve the religious idea; but they owe their existence to that idea, and not it to their invention. Here, as elsewhere, it is the demand which causes the supply. And so in regard to the practice of offering slain animals in sacrifice to God; the rite was in existence before a priesthood were employed in its service, as the facts already mentioned very plainly demonstrate.

In concluding this section of our subject, we submit, from the facts and considerations stated in the foregoing paragraphs, That the most "rational," etc., most reasonable origin to which we can assign these offerings, is the appointment of God. That meets all the necessities of the case. There is the fact of animal sacrifice existing from hoar antiquity; the record of its acceptance by the Almighty; and therefore we infer that it was not the product of human invention or suggestion, but of the enactment of God, for some gracious purpose toward man. The reason or purpose of God in this appointment may form the subject of a subsequent paper. Meanwhile, let the reader, by personal reflection, follow out the train of thought indicated in the foregoing paragraphs.—W. Laing in Bible Echo.

THE TWO SYSTEMS.

Reader, there are two distinct and separate systems of Christianity at the present day. It is useless to deny it. Their existence is a great fact, and one that cannot be too clearly known.

According to one system, religion is a mere corporate business. You are to belong to a certain body of people. By virtue of your membership of this body, vast privileges, both for time and eternity, are conferred upon you. It matters little what you are, and what you feel. You are not to try yourself by your feelings. You are a member of a great ecclesiastical corporation. Then all its privileges and immunities are your own. Do you belong to the one true visible ecclesiastical corporation? That is the grand question.

According to the other system, religion is eminently a personal business between yourself and Christ. It will not save your soul to be an outward member of any ecclesiastical body whatever, however sound that body may be. Such membership will not wash away one sin, or give you confidence in the day of judgment. There must be personal faith in Christ, personal dealings between yourself and God, personal felt communion between your own heart and the Holy Ghost. Have you his personal faith? Have you this felt work of the Spirit in your soul? This is the question. If not, you will be lost.

Reader, this last system is the system which those who are called evangelical ministers cleave to and teach. They do so because they are satisfied that it is the system of holy Scripture. They do so because they are convinced that any other system is productive of most dangerous consequences, and calculated to delude men fatally as to their actual state. They do so because they believe it to be the only system of teaching which God will bless, and no church will flourish so much as that in which repentance, faith in Christ, conversion, and the work of the Spirit, are the grand subjects of the minister's sermons.—J. C. Ryle.

The heart is never won back to God by thinking we ought to love him, but by learning what he is—all worthy of our love.

CORRECTION.—The article in the Crisis of Nov. 24th, entitled "Human Frailties and Divine Perfection," should have been credited to Sister L. M. Stoddard—not Exchange.

WESTFIELD.—The meetings in Westfield are daily increasing in interest. The Spirit of the Lord is present with power to search and cleanse hearts, comfort the saints, and persuade sinners to accept Christ as their Savior. It is said a hundred had to go away last evening (Nov. 21st) for want of room. We are looking for blessed results. Sins have been confessed, and blessings already received by many. The religious tide is rising with a cheering promise.

M. G.

SPREAD THE TRUTH.—We are rejoiced to find so many who are willing to make a sacrifice for the purpose of getting the light and truth to their friends and neighbors, by sending them the Crisis. We believe money thus expended will produce glorious results. Run up the three months list. Let every subscriber send one at least. Save the money by self-denial. Make a sacrifice, and blessings will follow far surpassing the sacrifices made for the good of others. Press the battle in the name of the Lord. M. G.

REVIVAL WORK.—This is the time when every church, and every Christian should be making special efforts to lead men to Christ. There is an unusual thoughtfulness at present on religious matters. A great revival may be expected the coming winter, if the proper means are employed by the professed disciples of Jesus. A wide door is open for faithful workers in the Lord's vineyard. "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5: 20.

M. G.

DELEGATES.—It should be remembered that the A. C. A. is to have a special meeting at Worcester, Dec. 14th, commencing at 2 P. M., for the purpose of revising its constitution. Delegates should be appointed the same as for the annual meeting of the Association, and all delegates must be supplied with certificates, signed by the chairman, or secretary of the meeting, at the time of the choice. The following form may answer.

This is to certify that —— was duly appointed by the church in —— as a delegate to the special meeting of the A. C. A., to be held at Worcester, Mass., Dec. 14th, 1875. (Dated.) (Signature.)

Every church can send one delegate, and an additional one for every fifty members above twenty-five. M. G.

BRO. MOODY IN PHILADELPHIA.

The meetings conducted by Bro. Moody and Sankey in Philadelphia have opened with exceedingly promising results. They began Sunday, Nov. 21st. The depot, which has been fitted up for the meetings, at a cost of some twenty thousand dollars, will seat about ten thousand people. It has already been crowded, and some five thousand had to go away for want of room. About one hundred and fifty ministers are in attendance, to co-operate with Bro. Moody, who is telling them some plain, practical truths, showing that the hindrance to thorough revival work is the low state of church members, produced by their conformity to the world in covetousness, selfishness, pride, fashion and folly. He is not harsh, unkind, or severe in his talk, but very plain, in love and sympathy, showing that he pities their sad condition, and has come as a friend to help them into the cleansing stream of salvation, through faith in Jesus.

His efforts the first week are wisely directed to the elevation of professors of religion, so that their first love may be restored, and be ready to labor for the salvation of sinners. Glorious results are expected in Philadelphia, during the coming month. Pray for that great city, that thousands may brought into harmony with Christ, and be ready to meet him at his coming.

M. G.

BIBLE CLASSES.

Bible classes, properly conducted, are of special importance in a church, but it frequently happens that Satan uses them as a means to accomplish his purposes. This he does, when he can persuade the members to take up disputed subjects, aud contend for the mastery. Whenever we go to a church, and find the Bible class engaged principally in examining points of controversy, we feel sure that their spirituality is in danger, and have much reason to fear a division, and cold formalism. Many churches have been ruined in this way. The members who hold opposite views, being confident they can convince the others of their errors, propose a Bible class to look over their points of dispute. Usually such result in a greater difference of feeling, followed by roots of bitterness, variance, and backsliding, and thus Satan turns a good thing to poor account, and obtains a victory. Look out for his devices. He generally attacks good people in the form of an angel of light.

In Bible classes, avoid as far as possible, those subjects which are calculated to stir up strife. As soon as a spirit of controversy gets into the class it is best to change the subject. Keep in the unity of the Spirit, or there will be no prosperity. Satan's chief aim is to divide and separate the children of the Lord, and thus weaken them, and get them to spend their strength in combating each other, instead of their common enemy. Look out for his cunning devices.

M. G.

WORK FOR JESUS.

There is a great lack of Christian workers. By Christian workers, we mean persons who are willing to labor for the salvation of sinners. Such as will not only pray, but follow up their prayers by personal conversation. A few kind words often result in great good, accomplishing more than many sermons. When we have conversed with an individual, trying to persuade him to come to Jesus, we feel just like praying for him afterwards. Our sympathies are kindled up in behalf of his welfare, far beyond what they would be if we said nothing.

One reason why there are so many backsliders is because there are but few professors who are doing anything to bring others to Christ. Their light is under a bushel, going, or gone out. If we would live, and grow up into Christ, we must make personal efforts to save and benefit those around us. The Spirit of Jesus in the heart produces christian activities for the welfare of others. In this way, sinners are led to the cross of Christ. When they find we have a friendly interest in what is for their best good, they are usually ready to listen to our conversation. If our hearts are full of love for Jesus, we shall find it easy to talk for him, and entreat others to come to the Life-giver.

At the present time, there is more than a common interest to hear about the way to be saved. Let every opportunity be improved for leading the people to Jesus. All who do not accept him must be lost. Do we realize this solemn fact as we should? Are we properly in earnest to save those about us who are in a perishing condition? Let us do all we can for Jesus. M. G.

OUR OWN HEATHEN.

We have borrowed the above heading, which was one given to an article in the Boston Globe, in which the writer deplores, as every good and intelligent man will do, the alarming increase of heathenism in the United States. The writer refers to articles which recently appeared in the Chicago Tribune, in which criticisms were made on the action of the American Board of Foreign Missions for appropriating their funds for christian labor in foreign lands, for the conversion of the heathen there, when the circumstances more urgently demand this labor at home.

The Editor of the Globe upon this point says: "We have with us a vast multitude whose abject poverty, dense ignorance, and undisciplined passions are the source of crime, vice, and iniquity, such as it would be difficult to find in any of those lands where "the heathen in his blindness bows down to wood and stone." Those heathens are, we fancy, comparatively guileless and harmless beings, when considered beside of the heathen that could be unearthed in any one of the large cities of the United States. We imagine, too, that they are fully as well off, both as regards their prospects in this life and the life to come, as our own heathen."

Is it possible that these Editors are correct in representing heathenism in this country as casting a darker shadow upon the human family, and being a heavier weight upon social life than can be found in heathendom itself? Can it be that the boasted land of christian influences and blessedness, the home of christian pilgrims, who determined that none but gospel laws should govern, and none but holy principles be accepted in society, should so soon present more deadly social virus than can be found in oriental heathendom? Are these statements correct? If they are, then virtuous purity, property and life are more dangerously threatened by lawlessness and crime than in heathen lands. They take the responsibility of saying it is so, and we are not able to disprove it. These men seem to believe what they say, for they entreat the Board of Foreign Missions to abandon the foreign field and appropriate all their means and efforts in home labor. The writer says—"Let these people withdraw their support from the Board of Foreign Missions, and direct their efforts to seeking and saving the lost in our cities and towns, instead of insisting on expensive enterprises to the Indies and the antipodes, and the Board would very soon cease to be."

Is heathenism too strong for Christianity in this country, so that the foreign forces must be recalled, and the army increased at home to withstand the powers of darkness? Our Christianity and heathenism stand face to face upon the field. Is one army gaining the victory? and if so, which is advancing, and which retreating? or is the battle a drawn game?

Heathenism, in the form of drunkenness, licentiousness, extortion, gambling, stealing, blasphemy, infidelity and murder, with all kinds of vileness and insubordination to law, is positively increasing in this country to an alarming degree. All state and municipal governments are put to their wits' end to know how to control the drunken, thieving, murderous masses, who, from the highest posts of trust to the lowest slums of vileness, challenge divine and human law. They sweep on, some creeping under the cover of darkness with the burglar's key, the incendiary's torch, and the assassin's knife, while excited crowds, like the dashing waves of a boisterous sea gather and tumultuously surge against all that is virtuous and good, to accomplish sworn revenge.

Then it is lamentably true that the hosts of sin are advancing. Our prisons are filled, our juvenile reformatory institutions are overflowing. The people every where feel an increasing insecurity. Life, property, and virtue, have to be guarded with sleepless vigilance. The people are becoming alarmed, and demand additional protection. They look to the national and state governments for defence against the rising tide of wickedness, but alas! the governments themselves have become corrupted with this satanic infection, so that the lawful guardians of the people have become the most notorious thieves. They grievously tax the lower classes, and let the rich go free. Legislators are bought and government offices are sold to the highest bidders. Courts of Justice are bribed, and the guilty are acquitted. The rich are heaping up their treasures, while the laboring classes are crying for bread. Infidelity and atheism are marching boldly to the front, and blasphemously crying, almost unrebuked, in the very heart of Christendom, Down with the Nazarene! away with the sacred Book! No honest and intelligent person will dispute these facts, demonstrated by statistical records.

Under such dark and threatening circumstances it is not strange that religiously taught politicians should hopefully look to the church for the power to withstand these advancing hosts, and drive them back to obedience to law and Christ. But how can a church be depended upon to overcome a power which has for a long time been rising and triumphing over her, unless her forces are increased, her arms, position, leaders, and hopeful inspiration are changed?

The church has not failed, for the last fifty years, to overcome and lessen the forces of sins, because she has not had a sufficient number of men, or amount of means, or political liberty to do that work; therefore the trouble must be found in some other department. We believe the trouble is not because the gospel has failed to triumph over sin, or because God has failed to furnish the required means to be used under it, but because human tradition has been substituted for the gospel, and therefore all the means God has given to be used as the gospel directs, has been employed according to that tradition. This we believe has been the great cause of the lamentable failure.

When men substitute human opinion for the facts expressed by the words of inspiration, a failure is inevitable; for it is employing the imperfect for the perfect. It is like using shadows for substance. We might as well bridge a stream with fog, and think to make it passable for teams, as to use the traditions of men, founded upon their contradictory opinions, as gospel truth, by which to conquer infidelity and drive back the hosts of sin.

Human power has been substituted for the divine, so that it has become common for the church to depend upon the coming of certain men, and the combination of certain circumstances controlled by men, for a revival of religion, and the conquering of Satan's hosts. Human influences are sought in place of the power of God's Word and Spirit, such as the inspiration of seeing a vast concourse of people, the charm of sweet singing by a multitude, the telling of sympathetic stories, the popular influence of going with a multitude to the professed christian altar.

These things are not sinful in themselves, but when they are depended upon for the accomplishment of gospel results, the results they produce are vastly below those produced by the real power of the Spirit, so that effects which follow fail to elevate the spiritual standard, but only result in a reaction which carries it lower than before.

God cannot pour his blessings upon men when they cease to employ the heavenly means he has instituted for the regulating of human society, and presumptuously substitute those which their wisdom may choose, and their efforts may produce.

How can the church withstand the tide of the sin of gambling when she gives the first lessons of the wicked games at her consecrated altars? Can it overcome the wickedness of intemperance while its chief members tip the bowl of high wines, and rent to rum-sellers their dens of death? Is not her power neutralized for the suppression of evil habits, when her representative men are the leading extortioners of the age, giving fourteen ounces for a pound, thirty quarts for a bushel, and poisonous adulterations for pure food? How can she lead men to abandon the debasing, brutalizing habits of tobacco chewing and opium smoking, gluttony and night revels, while her communicants are allowed to openly and persistently indulge in them? How can the church correct the wicked habits of extravagance among the people, in wearing forbidden ornamental garments, in building expensive houses, in eating gluttonously, and in wasting the bounties of a kind Providence upon the carnal lusts of a depraved nature, while she is openly and continually doing the same things? The church can never raise the fallen out of the mire of wickedness, while her feet are in the same pit? If she would rescue the sinking sinner, let her plant her feet on the solid Rock.

God has proposed to save men through the foolishness of preaching the gospel, but men choose something of more worldly dignity, which will give them more notoriety and praise of men. They often foolishly consent to make themselves, or to be made the objects of admiration, the magnet to attract men, and thus proselyte them to their own position, instead of leading them to Christ. Divine truth, vitalized and applied by the Holy Spirit, is heaven's only prescription for the terrible malady of sin.

The pure church, in all ages, has made parts and principles of divine revelation the magnet of attraction, the grand objects advertised, and the themes of exciting interest.

Noah, Job and Daniel, with all the prophets and holy men of ancient times, moved the generations of their times by echoing the voice of God, delivering to the people the messages he sent, to instruct them in things pertaining to their general and specific duties.

The grand rallying cry of Christ and the apostles was divine truth—the gospel—doctrine, argument, and the unfolding of the prophecies.

Luther stood upon this rock and shook the world, raising a storm of persecution from a worldly, proselyting church, which depended altogether for success upon sensationalism, the exciting of human passions by the externals of their worship. He brought this indignation upon himself and brethren by warning the church, as God called him to do, of its worldliness and false position, teaching them that their standard was the church, the decrees of the Councils, and the authority of the Popes; but he said, "Our cry is the Word of the Lord! the Word of the Lord!" He prepared no other defense for himself and the cause he loved, when he went to Worms, than the words of Inspiration and the Holy Spirit.

Wesley, Fletcher, Whitefield, and all the reformers, went every where, stirring the people mightily with the great messages of doctrinal, practical and prophetical truth, sent home to the hearts of their hearers by the power of the Spirit.

It seems to us that Satan in these last days is making his mightiest efforts to make unimportant and obnoxious to the church certain important portions of God's Word; just as it was in the days of Christ, Luther, and Wesley. Christ was hung upon the cross simply because he would preach doctrines and prophecies contrary to the decrees and wishes of the elders. Luther was called before Charles V., because he preached forgiveness of sins through Christ and not the Pope. Wesley was persecuted because he preached that a higher standard of christian purity and holiness was necessary than the ritualistic religion of the "Established Church."

A nominal, worldly religion will always carry in its train the masses, because it does not require them to bear the cross, but only go with the popular currents produced by sensationalism; while the Word of God, when preached in its purity, always demands the bearing of the cross, which is going in opposition to the popular currents, and consequently will carry but few in its "narrow way."

When revivals of religion are produced by advertising men more than by preaching the truths of God's Word, and by sensational excitement more than by deep, pungent conviction pressing upon the heart in secret places, we fear it, and believe that a reaction will invariably follow all such anti-gospel influences, and carry the moral and spiritual standard of society lower than before, thus increasing heathenism and not diminishing it.

Is it not true at the present time that in many of the great religious movements the leaders forbid the preaching of doctrinal truth, and especially prophetic subjects, because they say, "It will destroy the revival"? that is, it interferes with our plans, and the advancement of the interests of our church. Is not this exactly what Christ, Luther and Wesley met?

The most artfully coiled and fatal snares Satan has laid for men in all ages, and especially at the transition periods from one dispensation to another, has been superficial, false religion, or worship not in harmony with God's designs. The true church has met this at every point, and shed her most bitter tears and righteous blood while lifting up her voice against this ensnaring influence. The Scriptures every where represent this mighty delusion as being most dangerous and threatening near the end. "The Spirit speaketh expressly [calling particular attention to the fact] that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." They are denounced of God because they have a false "faith," which is false because it embraces false "doctrines," such as devils advocate. All satanic doctrines rest upon the proof found in the grand text uttered by the prince of devils—"Ye shall NOT surely die."

To substantiate that doctrine, spiritualistic principles have been presented with every possible shade of fancy, thus making of no importance and hiding the real and tangible creation by a mythical, intangible, deathless existence, and so making God's Word false, which says, "Ye shall surely die."

Those worshiping with such a faith, in the "last days," are represented as being "proud," "unholy," and "despisers [not persecutors] of those that are good." "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such [the commandment of God is] turn away." They will manifest great advancement in "learning," doctrines of men, and will never be "able to come to the knowledge of the truth"—the truth essential to godliness in the "last days." They will practically deny the "power" of godliness by substituting human and worldly traditions and influences to disarm heathenism and take away sin. They will also deny the "power" "to know the times or the seasons," which Jesus promised his church should receive "after that the Holy Ghost is come."

That Jesus and Paul refer to the same power in these passages is evident from the fact that both were speaking of it in connection with those living when the end of the age shall come. Then those having this power will be able to understand the "season" when the "kingdom will be restored to Israel"; while those who deny this power will "go no further; for their folly [in denying it] shall be manifest to all men, as theirs also was," and as was the folly of the Egyptians who opposed God's teaching by Moses.

We confidently believe that the times and circumstances foretold in these sacred predictions are the times we are occupying, and the events are now transpiring before our eyes; and therefore God calls upon his watchmen of this generation to faithfully warn the people of present snares to which their feet are exposed. The duty to us is painful but imperative. We do it not to please ourself, but because Christ has commanded it, and because of our love to those exposed. These are truly perilous times.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

We again call attention to the above illustrated Sunday-school paper issued by the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society. Since weekly Sunday-school lessons have been published in it, the paper has become more interesting than ever, and a number of our Sabbath-schools have already adopted them for their weekly lessons. We recommend all our Sunday-schools to begin the new year by adopting the Young Pilgrim Bible Lessons, and we feel sure they will be pleased with the lessons presented to them. The paper is the only one of the kind for the young which makes prominent in a pleasing manner the doctrine of the Second Advent near, and other kindred truths, and is well worthy, and indeed deserves, the support of all Christians, but particularly of those who are "looking for that blessed hope."

Sunday-school superintendents will find it for the interest of their schools to be well supplied with Young Pilgrims; and those parents whose children are not able to attend any Sabbath-school will find this a convenient and profitable way to have their children study at their homes a series of entertaining and instructive Bible lessons, besides being furnished with attractive stories, and other suitable reading matter.

We hope to hear from many schools wishing to increase the number already taken, and also from those who have never taken it as yet. Terms, single copies, 50 cts. a year; ten copies and under, to one address, 40 cts. a year; fifty copies and over, 35 cts. a year. Address all subscriptions to this office. AG'T.

THE HARLOT POWER.

The Harlot Power is boastful, just as God said she would be in the last days, as the following extracts will show:

MONTREAL, Nov. 22. Yesterday the cures of the Roman Catholic city churches announced the reception of the pastoral letter relative to the interment of Guibord in consecrated ground. The third paragraph in the letter reads:

"We have truly declared in virtue of the divine power, that we exercise in the name of the Pastor of pastors, that the place where the body of this rebellious son of the church has been deposited is separated from the rest of the consecrated cemetery, to be no longer more than a profane place, an ordinary piece of ground.

TORONTO, Nov. 22. The Pastoral of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy of Ontario was read in all the churches throughout the Province yesterday, and is published this morning. Of the civil power it says: There are unwise men who presume to assert that the civil power is supreme even in spiritual affairs; that to its spiritual power we should be subordinate. Were the apostles to have believed that the Gospel could not have been preached in the world and handed down to us until now. Civil power is from God, for the well-being of society, and its own limits are bounded by the same law of the same God from whom it derives its authority. It has no right to interfere with the preaching of the true Gospel, and the establishment of the religion of Christ when the means taken are peaceful.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—The Progres du Nord states that the clergy of Roubaix refused to chant the prayer beginning with the words Domine fac salvam rempublicam on the 7th, as requested in the circular of the Minister of public worship.—N. Y. Witness.

They do this because they despise the French Republic, which exists contrary to the wish and purpose of the Pope. There is but one civil government upon the face of the earth but what they do despise, and that is Spain, whose loyalty to the Pope is now being tested. The Roman Hierarchy is now inaugerating a war against all civil governments which do not acknowledge the Pope as the only divinely appointed arbiter upon the earth of all civil and ecclesiastical questions. He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. J. C.

A HERESY.

We see evidence that Satan is trying to introduce the heresy among good people, that the coming of Jesus consists in being filled with the Holy Spirit, and not in his personal, literal advent. We have just received a report of a sermon, published in the Biddeford (Me.) Daily Times, in which it is said:

"The Second Advent theory is not needed. Did we know Christ more, should we look for his coming in the clouds? Must not our partial, even intellectual knowledge pass away, that the perfect may come? The truth is the telescope by which we see; it is not the eye. Christ is more than truth—he if a Spirit dwelling in our spirit. Our relation to our Lord is not changed by his going away. He is with us, not in imagination, as a figure; not in the understanding as a fact; not in the sensibilities as a feeling; but in the intuition of the Spirit, as it were a new sense, by which the soul discerns the things of God. When we thus know him, we do not crave to know him othewwise, least of all corporeally."

"In the cars I overheard the remark, 'I do not see how so many good people who love the Savior, disbelieve in his advent.' To me it is as strange that any do believe in it. If he comes to them daily with all the graces and gifts of the Spirit—if they are complete in him, if with Paul they can say 'I live, yet not I, Christ liveth in me'—why should they look for him as visible?"

"Christ's second coming is the Holy Spirit—so he came on Pentecost and will so continue to do, till all know him. His work in the flesh is finished; there is no more need nor any promise of it again."

Satan knows the time is at hand for Jesus to return, and set up the everlasting kingdom, hence he is trying to seduce people away from this grand and important truth, and make them accept a false view of the coming of Christ. In consequence of having led many to adopt the unscriptural view that persons go to their reward at death, before the judgment; and that the kingdom of heaven is a spiritual one, set up in christian hearts; and that when good men die, they go at once to be with Jesus in heaven; then Satan may easily persuade them that there is no reason for Christ's personal return to this earth.

In the sermon, to which reference has been made, the preacher represents the Savior as saying: I go in body, to return in the Holy Spirit. . . . It is best for you that I go in the sense and character I now am, and come again in an altogether different one." How unlike is the teaching of this minister from that of the Bible. Said Jesus: "If I go, . . . I will come again." John 14: 3. This implies that the same Jesus that was on the earth some eighteen hundred years ago, is the one that went away, and is to come again as truly and literally as he did the first time. The apostle Paul says: "They themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." 1 Thess. 9–10. Here we learn that the Jesus who was raised from the dead is the one who is to return.

Again Paul says: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." 1 Thess. 5: 16. "The Lord himself" cannot mean the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit was present when Paul wrote. The apostle does not say the Lord has come, but that he shall descend from heaven." Said the shining ones, when Jesus was taken up to his Father in heaven, this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." No language could be more positive to show that the real, personal Savior, who was taken up into heaven, is to come back to this planet. M. G.

MOODY AND SANKEY.

When speaking of Brn. Moody and Sankey, in relation to the secret of their success, the N. Y. Witness says:

"Here is our view of the case: Unselfishness is the greatest power in the world. The man who gladly makes sacrifices for the honor of God and the well-being of mankind wields an immense power. When the Holy Spirit is allowed to enter and occupy the hearts of men, selfishness disappears. Selfishness and the Holy Spirit cannot dwell together. It is because of the absolute unselfishness of these evangelists now working in Brooklyn that multitudes hear them gladly. They are earnest and enthusiastic, not seeking their own, but Christ's glory. They themselves are nothing—Christ is everything.

Persistent effort has been made by the enemies of pure and undefiled religion to discover flaws ih the character and methods of these men. The world itself, which generally delights in truthfulness and fair play, has frowned down the effort as dishonorable. Honest christians know well the falsity of the accusation. These self-denying men have no stain of Cæsar's gold about them. They are engaged in heaven's mission, working to lift society from the debasing bondage of Satan to the blessed service of Christ. In self-sacrifice they are strong.

It is because Moody and Sankey are like Enoch, walking daily with God, that they are honored and successful. They have learned that most difficult lesson, that we cannot serve God and mammon. They are bold, yet unassuming soldiers of the cross; not afraid of the warfare, but rejoicing in the conflict. It is upon such the blessing of heaven descends. There is no difficulty in understanding the power of these men. It is of God. They are living obedient lives. If we fail to perceive the connection the fault is our own. The scales have not yet fallen from our eyes." M. G.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

FROM BRO. P. G. BOWMAN.

Dear Brethren:—Last Saturday and Sunday I held a two days' meeting at the Advent Chapel at Andrews Mills. On Saturday I had the pleasure, for the first time, of hearing J. S. Du Bose preach, and I would just say, no body of christians need be ashamed of him or his preaching. If he lives, and is faithful to himself, the cause of God and truth, he will be an able minister of our Lord Jesus Christ, rightly dividing the Word of God. Do pray for him, that he may be sustained, and be made a great blessing to his fellow men.

On Sunday the clouds and rain gathered up, which kept many at home who otherwise would have been with us; but as it was, we had a goodly number out, among them Bro. Parrott, a Baptist minister. We had a blessed meeting in the house, and afterward at the water, where two were planted in the likeness of Christ's death. O may they be in the likeness of his resurrection when he comes in the clouds of heaven. Three or four others were expected to come forward, but I suppose the rain kept them at home.

I feel a little like Job's war-horse, who smells the battle afar off, and paws the earth with impatience to be in the fight. But I must bow with resignation to the providence of God, and do all I can for my poor, suffering wife, the mother of my children, who is wasting away day by day, but rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory, in bright prospect of immortality and eternal life when Jesus comes. Dear friends, will you not remember us in our time of great trial?

One thing more at this time: The Methodist preacher, who has charge of the circuit here in Darlington county, is distributing a tract of some size, published by the Amer. Tract Society, written by a Mr. Warren, in which he tries to prove that all people who believe as we do, as a people, are Sadducees. Bro. George Thomson, of the Northwest, has ably reviewed that tract. Now I want at once one hundred copies for distribution, so that the people can see both sides of the question. Who among my brethren at the North will remember me here in this mission in South Carolina, and send me the above number? God bless you all, dear friends, and keep us all in the unity of the spirit and in the bonds of peace until Jesus comes. Amen, so let it be.

REPORT OF CONFERENCE.

The Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec convened at the "Old Meeting House" in Hatley, as per adjournment, at the call of its President. Objection was made by one member to the business being done at the Lake View Campmeeting, as was desired and thought advisable by several interested. On account of bad weather the attendance was not large. Business attended to as follows:

First, the opening address by the President, adverting to the object of our meeting, taking a retrospective view of the events of the past year, and as important among them, the sudden death of our esteemed brother, Eld. N. Stevens, Vice President of the Conference. He also brought forward the subject of our campmeeting interest, and discussed it at some length; stated briefly what had been done; expressed regret that there was no entire union in carrying forward this important interest, and recommended a feeling of kindness and love, while we may be firm in maintaining the right.

Next following the address the members' names were enrolled by the Secretary, which were in number about the same as last year.

Then followed the examination of the character, fellowship and work of the ministerial members of the Conference, as their names were read, whether present or absent; and upon what was deemed requisite scrutiny, all were passed, and a vote of appro bation and confidence given in the case of each.

Next, report of the Official Board of the Conference, which is as follows:—

"Christian Brethren in Conference assembled, Greeting:—Another year of earthly toil and sorrow is past, and in its flight has borne away some of our loved ones, thus impressing us with the importance of the cardinal doctrine of our faith and hope, the resurrection to life eternal. We are believers in the coming resurrection. One of our number, since our last meeting, has fallen into the jaws of death, and we deeply mourn for him as lost to us from our counsels. Bro. Stevens is not with us to-day to preside, and aid by advice, effort and example, as once he was ready to do. His memory is blessed. His work is done. His course is finished. And, while we still toil, he waits for his crown. May his memory live, the sweet savor of his name abide, and his example encourage us in our work.

As a report of what we have done during the past year, this may be somewhat wanting. But we have planned and attempted a great work, and think we see some good results following, and in some degree resulting from our associated action. Public sentiment is being gradually changed. Unscriptural and excessive religious developments are very much less than a year ago. Good brethren, who had misplaced confidence, and perhaps overrated in some degree, are apparently in a more healthy state of mind. We have planned, prepared for in part, and held our first Annual Conference Campmeeting, which, all things duly considered, was a success; especially in the spirit and tone of its meetings, from the very first and throughout. The weather being extremely unpleasant during a part of the time, and tent accommodations not what they should have been, made our circumstances more unfavorable; but we fondly hope that some of the obstacles in the way of the complete and full success of our campmeeting interest will in time be removed, and that all interested will conclude to unite in the work properly, and so it be made a blessing to many of those unconverted.

The resolutions passed at our last Conference are our registered pledges, which we would rather keep than change. Our committal to the scriptural principles of church order we do not wish to withdraw or modify, but re-affirm with emphasis, and pledge ourselves anew to carry out, as what God designed, and therefore best. All has not been done by us in this direction that ought to be, and until it is done we are shorn of our strength; but being well and faithfully done we are invincible.

Hoping that by renewed and more earnest effort, being united and faithful in our work, we shall have a more encouraging report to give at our next session (if we have another), we submit the above, and profess anew our steadfast faith in the nearness of the kingdom of God, and the return to our planet of Jesus the Messiah to reign gloriously and eternally; and may we all be prepared to hear him pronounce the final 'Well done.' Until then let us work, and hope, and wait, and our expectation will not be in vain.

All of which is submitted by the Official Board of Conference. (Signed)

C. P. Dow, Pres.

In behalf of the Conference."

On motion that the above report be adopted, it was moved in amendment that the report be laid on the table. Carried.

At this point a written report of the campmeeting committee was called for, and in response the chairman of that committee said he had prepared an exhaustive written report, occupying over fifty-five pages of foolscap, if the meeting had time and patience to hear it; when it was moved that a condensed written report be presented Saturday morning at nine o'clock. In amendment it was moved and carried "that the chairman of that committee make a verbal report immediately." Motion was made that the report be adopted, and the action of the committee be approved. Carried.

The report of the Official Board was then taken from the table, and by vote adopted.

The nomination and election of a Vice President was called for by the Chair, which resulted in the appointment of Elder E. G. Chadsey to that office.

A campmeeting committee of five to take charge of and advance the interests belonging to the Lake View Campmeeting, at Magog, were appointed as follows: Elder L. Marsh, Broome; C. D. Jewell, East Farnham; Dea. H. Orcutt, Fitch Bay; N. Cass and C. P. Dow, Magog.

The place of the next session, and the time of our next campmeeting were appointed as follows: Campmeeting at Magog, immediately after the Alton Bay Campmeeting, the very first of September; and the Conference business to be done there, so as not to interfere with its more public services.

Elder C. P. Dow tendered his resignation as President, which was promptly met by a resolution asking him to withdraw his resignation. Carried by vote, and consented to by the President. Preaching during Conference by Elders Chapman, Marsh, Sorenberger, Tilson, and Dow, interspersed with social exercises. Elder T. W. Piper was appointed as delegate from the New Hampshire Conference to ours, and came to our campmeeting expecting the Conference business would be done there, and failed by no fault of his to be present.

By vote of Conference, Elder L. Marsh was appointed as delegate to the New Hampshire Conference, or required to obtain a substitute. No written reports from our churches were received by the Secretary. Reports given were incidental.

FROM BRO. H. H. TUCKER.

Dear Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad:—We have been having meetings since the dedication of our new Chapel. Bro. I. I. Leslie, of Newton Lower Falls, Mass., has been with us, preaching and laboring, going from house to house with me, and praying with and for the dear children; and the good Lord has blessed us with a baptism of love and unity. We think the little flock were never in as good a condition to work for the perishing as they are now. While Bro. Leslie was with us the whole church came forward to the front and took a consecrated position, consecrating themselves anew to God and his cause. It was a touching scene. Backsliders were moved, and came with them; also a man and his wife came out of the enemy's ranks, and cried for mercy, and obtained it. Praise the Lord's dear name. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the skirts of his garments." We desire the prayers of God's dear children that souls may be won to Jesus and his cause. Your Bro. in the blessed hope.

Obituaries.

Rowley. In Burrville, Conn., Nov. 15th, of typhoid fever and hemorrhage of the bowels, Mrs. H. H. Rowley, daughter of Matthew Grant, and wife of the proprietor of the Winsted House, Winsted Conn.

From a personal acquaintance with Sister Rowley I am happy to say she was a sincere, amiable christian. She died in great composure of mind, after a short illness, and now sleeps in hope of a glorious resurrection when He who is her life shall appear. She loved the "blessed hope," and rejoiced in it, and always when I met her seemed to have that uppermost in her mind. I am certain it is true of her that she had "sanctified the Lord God in her heart, and was ready always to give a reason of the hope that was in her with meekness and fear." She leaves a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Her husband now lies sick of the typhoid fever, and is in a critical condition.

"Sleep on beloved, sleep,"
And take thy rest.

A. W. Bradford.

Burleigh. In Holderness, N. H., Nov. 1st, 1875, Bro. Jeremiah Burleigh, aged eighty-two years.

Our brother was one of the many that embraced the blessed truth of Christ's soon coming in 1843, and he was not ashamed to defend his hope before friend or foe. Many will remember his earnest testimonies in our conferences and other meetings; but he rests from care, toil and suffering. The hope that comforted in life sustained him in death. His house was a home for the servants of God.

He laid away an excellent companion a few years ago, but soon they will meet on the evergreen shore. He leaves children who feel that father and mother rest in Jesus, to awake in the resurrection morning. May they be prepared to meet where sorrow's tear will never fall. Funeral attended by the writer, when from Rom. 8: 24, we endeavored to show the saving power of hope, what it embraced, and when consummated.

Pinkham. In Farmington, N. H.. Oct. 29th, 1875, Bro. Levi H. Pinkham, in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

Our brother, after months of much suffering, which he endured with great patience, calmly fell asleep, to awake to immortality and life eternal, where suffering and parting will never come. He embraced Christ and the blessed truths of the Bible, and was with his companion baptized by Eld. C. S. Emerson, in 1854. He leaves a wife and three children, who deeply feel their loss. May they be prepared to meet in paradise restored. The funeral was attended by the writer, assisted by the F. Baptist and Congregationalist ministers of the place, when words of comfort were spoken from John 11: 23. J. G. Smith.

Knapp. At Middle Granville, N. Y., Oct. 20th, 1865, Mrs. Gertrude B. Knapp, aged 30 years.

Sr. Knapp professed religion during Elder Grant's labors, some seventeen years ago. Her life has been a good one. All loved her sweet christian spirit, and though her life was oftimes clouded by sickness, yet she was ever patient and resigned; yea more, she was ever rejoicing in the Lord, and reflecting his glorious light, so that all who met her would feel its warming influence. She leaves a little babe, a weeping husband, mother, brother and sisters, besides a sorrowing church, but not "as others having no hope," for her "life was Christ," then to "die" was "gain." "He that walketh uprightly walketh surely."

Arthur A. Waite.

Ladd. In Patton, P. Q., Sept. 27th, my father, S. G. Ladd, aged eighty-one years, five months and four days.

A discourse was preached by Bro. J. Magoon, from Luke 14: 14. Father has been a believer in the speedy coming of Christ since 1842, and died in the triumph of faith, believing he should not sleep but a few days when he with all the loved jewels that sleep in the lap of earth would be raised to an immortal life to shout victory over the grave. My prayer is, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." U. G. Ladd.

Smith. In Orange, Mass., Nov. 11th, 1875, Sister F. P. Smith, aged 81 years.

She embraced the doctrine of Christ's coming in 1843, which, together with the resurrection of the dead, has been her theme, and sustained her declining years. She was a faithful, consistent follower of Jesus, and is sleeping in him, awaiting his call to immortality. Remarks were made at the funeral from Job 14th chapter.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Nov. 13. While the tide was ebbing to-day, a bore or tidal wave ten feet high swept up the Parrett River, in Somersetshire. At Bridgewater dock-gates were burst open, and vessels broken from their moorings. One vessel was sunk, and twenty were more or less damaged.

The tide in the Thames this morning was the highest on record. Greenwich and the low lands along the river were partially inundated.

Nov. 22. The last storm was most disastrous to the fishing craft, especially on the east coast. Fourteen lives have already been reported lost, and many vessels are missing. The brig Elizabeth has been wrecked off Whitby and the bark Fairy Queen off Calais. All on board both vessels were lost.

The Morning Echo announces that on account of the recent floods the sanitary authorities have declared a district of Bristol, with a population of 6,000 souls, unfit for habitation until midsummer. Thousands of acres in the valley of the Trent will probably remain under water throughout the winter.

Large numbers of pilgrims are arriving in Rome daily.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The Union League of America will meet in Philadelphia, on the 8th of December. In the call just issued the vital question of the maintenance of the common schools receives the greatest prominence. "Our common schools are in danger. We call upon you to rally to the defense." But other highly important matters are not overlooked. Retrenchment and economy in the National Adminstration; pure and capable men for the public service; a proper adjustment of the finances, and the protection of American citizens at home and abroad are all recognized as essential questions. There is a clause vaguely calling for more "encouragement of the productive industries of the country" which requires explanation.—N. Y. Witness.

Philadelphia, Penn., Nov. 20. The Market street bridge, crossing the Schuylkill river, and connecting the eastern and western parts of the city, was entirely consumed by fire this afternoon, by the heat of the gas igniting from a stove in the watchman's box at the Eastern end. The bridge was 550 feet long, forty-two feet wide, and was built in 1798, at a cost of $300,000, and rebuilt in 1850 at a cost of $100,000. It was the finest covered wooden bridge in the country. Insured for $75,000. A temporary bridge will be constructed until it can be rebuilt.

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 21. An attempt was made to fire the new Episcopal church, now building on Pleasant street, early this morning. Officers discovered and extinguished a right smart blaze from a bunch of chips and shavings piled upon the first floor of the edifice, which had already burned through the thick flooring, so that sparks were dropping into the cellar. The incendiaries are unknown.

The "reign of terror" which years ago gave a bad pre-eminence to the city of Baltimore, seems to have returned. The recent election was a scene of fearful disorder, and but too plainly indicates the necessity of speedy measures to curb the proclivities of the mob, before a state of anarchy prevails.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred by express. Ag't.

A CROWN FOR ME.

L. A. DEWEY.

"And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away."—1 PETER 5: 4.

When the chief Shepherd comes again,
With all his saints, on earth to reign,
Will I receive in that great day
A crown, that fadeth not away?
And my dear Savior shall I see,
And live with him eternally?
The weakest one, and can it be
There is a crown awaiting me?

My faith looks up to Christ on high;
Yes, Jesus lives and hears my cry;
He cheers my heart, speaks peace within,
Has cleansed me with his blood from sin.
He is my light, my strength, my guide,
He is my rock, in him I'll hide;
If faithful to the end I'll be,
A crown of life he's promised me.

O, help me, Lord, to watch and pray,
While life shall last, be thou my stay;
Dear Jesus, take me by the hand,
And lead me safely to the end.
Though dark and thorny be the road,
Help me to trust in thee, my God;
Help me while here the cross to bear,
That I a glorious crown may wear.

HOW TO BE FOUND AT THE COMING OF CHRIST.

"Whereupon, beloved, seeing that we look for such things, be diligent that ye be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless."—2 PETER 3: 14.

In the text the apostle uses the fact of the coming of Christ and the closing up of this dispensation as an argument in favor of holiness, or rather the text on which he bases an earnest exhortation to a blameless life.

First, when he comes we are to be found of him in peace. How nearly this agrees with the apostle Paul's exhortation to his Hebrew brethren, "Follow peace with all, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."

When Christ comes we are to be found in peace with God. This peace the sinner knows nothing about, for as the apost'e says "the carnal mind is enmity against God. And as the apostle James says, "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." If the sinner therefore is an enemy, at war with God, how can he be brought into terms of peace? By abandoning his rebellion, surrendering unconditionally, laying down the weapon of his warfare, and seeking for reconciliation through our Lord Jesus Christ.

But we must not only be at peace with God when Christ comes, but we must be found at peace with each other. There must be no bickerings, or dissensions or quarrelings when Christ comes, if we would hail his coming with joy. But the soul that is reconciled to God will be reconciled to his brethren.

Second, But we are not only to be found in peace when Christ comes, but we are to be "without spot or blemish." This of course refers to the spots that sin has made upon the soul. How glaring are many of these spots, such for instance as murder, and drunkenness, and theft, and idolatry, and licentiousness. And then how many spots there are on the soul, not as glaring and conspicuous as these, such as pride, and impatience, and envy and ambition, and unbelief, and slothfulness, etc. All these spots are offensive to God, and must be renounced.

But is there any means by which these spots can be washed away? I answer there is. The precious blood of Christ, can cleanse us from all these offensive spots of sin, whether they be great or small in our estimation. He can cleanse even the murderer from his awful crime, and he can also cleanse us from the most perceptible taint of corruption, for "He is able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by him." What a blessed thought it is, that the blood of the Lamb will cleanse from all the spots that sin has made, and wash us whiter than snow.

Third, But we are not only to be found without spot but we are to be found blameless. But is it possible for any human being to live so as to be blameless? Possibly not in the estimation of his fellow man, but it is possible for him to be blameless before God. God's command to Abram was, "Walk thou before me and be thou perfect." It is much easier to be reckoned perfect and blameless by God than by man.

But in what elements are we to be blameless? Not in judgment nor in conduct, for in these respects we never shall be blameless. In his letter to the Ephesians, the apostle tells us in what elements his blamelessness is to be, "that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." This blamelessness then is to be in love, and this blamelessness can be reached by all, and this element of character is what will enable us to welcome the coming of Christ.

And now dear reader, as the apostle says, let us be diligent in obtaining this spotless and blameless character. For Christ may come at any moment.—Prophetic Times.

EARNESTNESS.

L. B. WEAVER.

The times in which we live are very strange and peculiar, and yet they were spoken and prophesied of long years ago. As they pass, full of crime and wickedness, we know we are coming nearer the end of all things, the day of rest eternal, the day for which we as a people long and sigh. Yet as we read from day to day what is transpiring, our hearts are sad, and we cry unto the Lord to keep us in his own loving care till all these bloody scenes and awful crimes shall have passed away.

As we look abroad into the world, we see the people are earnestly rushing on blindfolded, as it were, to destruction, seemingly caring for nothing but money. How earnest they are to get that. They plan and plot every way to obtain it, and after committing some awful crime, and taking human life to get it, they rush with speed to get away from their pursuers. I have been thinking, and asking myself if we are looking for a home eternal, where no want, no sorrow, no suffering, no trials, no privations, nor any thing that can make us unhappy, or be against our good. All that we ever could think or desire will be in that blessed kingdom; and best of all, none will ever be sick, or die, or have any distress whatever.

In view of all these things, are we earnestly working to have as many as possible go with us to that home? and is there danger of our losing it, after we ourselves have preached to others? O my God, help! help us in these things, and do open our eyes to see ourselves as thou dost see us. If ever there was a time when people ought to look into their own hearts, and to watch their own lives, and to live every moment as though it was their last, it is now. Where is the earnestness of former days?

How much there is in these last days to draw the little flock from the Rock of their refuge. Why, it does seem to me that a double effort ought to be put forth now to keep people from going into presumptuous sins; for truly, we are living in dangerous times. Dangers on every hand; and Satan of course knows as well as we do that he has got but a little time to work in, and it does seem as if there were too many who are his willing subjects, led about by him. How true it is that Satan has come down in great wrath, knowing that his time is short.

It does seem as if we had come to that time when we should heed the admonition of Jude—"Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. And of some have comparison, making a difference; and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire, hating even the garments spotted by the flesh." Jude, 21–23.

Jesus has done everything for us, and we have done next to nothing for him. How gladly we should obey him in everything. When he commands us to come out from sin and sinners, and be his true followers, it is our duty to do it at once. We should do all in our power, by his help, to bring souls to him. I have often thought, could I know that even one poor soul would be saved through my weak instrumentality, I would be willing to suffer far worse than I have, for I do want to do some little good while here a weary, suffering child I stay. Jesus has done so much for us, is anything that we can do too much to do for him? Truly, I feel like a mere worm, the smallest creature in his sight, after having so much done for me. Gladly will I yield anything and everything to him. He has said, "Be ye holy, for I am holy." Then we should in every way try to be what he has taught us to be, denying self in every way that he has taught us to do.

It seems so sad to me to see or know of those who profess to love Jesus so well, and are looking for his appearing, and yet are occupied with the poor, trifling, unsatisfying things of this world, just to please some one else, not thinking how it grieves the dear Savior, who has done so much for us, to see them going almost hand in hand with the world, laughing and talking with them in their worldly amusements, uniting almost heart and hand with them in these transitory things; and if it makes us feel badly to see it, how must Jesus feel to see it, when he has done all that could be done to save them? O that they could see how he pleads for them to come out from these things, and be sober, and watch unto prayer; for "the end of all things is at hand."

WHERE SHALL I FIND THE BLESSING?

A. ROSS.

While it is true a person may have a correct theory of truth and doctrine, and be cold and stoical in his feelings, and destitute of those warm emotions which the divine Spirit alone kindles up in the heart, is it equally true that a person whose theories of the Word and Christian doctrine are distorted and unsound can just as well be filled with all the fulness of God and the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost? If so, of what avail is truth in sanctification? Why did our Lord pray, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth"? Again—"Now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you"? and again—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you"? and—"If any man shall do his will, he shall know of the doctrine"?

One great reason why there are so many false theories and doctrines, is the fact that so little importance is attached to that which is true. If we did but realize that without sanctification none are prepared for the coming of Christ, and, that the knowledge of the truth and the cleansing efficacy of the Redeemer's blood, through the eternal Spirit, is essential to sanctification, we should hesitate many times so long before accepting certain phases of teaching, that what is urged upon us for truth would prove itself to be putrified error. That which ye have already "hold fast," was the injunction of the Spirit to the churches. What had they? "Thou hast kept the word of my patience," and "hast not denied my faith." Jesus and the Word of God constitute all the elements of sanctifying power in the church; and where Jesus is enthroned in the affections, and the sacred Word is studied, believed, and acted upon, there is sanctification, full and complete.

"But where shall I go to obtain the blessing?" says some anxious, forlorn soul. O, fearing one, right where you are, right on your own hearth-stone, right amid worldly care and family perplexity; jnst where your post of duty is, though among enemies who all the day long watch for your halting, and whose every breath is cruelty. There the Word of God may have free course in you, and be glorified; there Jesus can magnify the power of divine grace, and reveal to your heart the wonders of his love. It is where you have tribulation you may sing—

"Though troubles assail, and dangers affright,
Though friends should all fail, and foes all unite,
Yet one thing secures me whatever betide,
The Scriptures assure me the Lord will provide."

It was not by cool Siloam's shady rill that the apostles and prophets found the blessing, but amid the upheavings and rage of human passion, under the false accusation of the old dragon, confronting humanly invented systems of faith, and false theories of religion; in journeyings, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings, in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness, many times with life jeopardized, counted all the day long as sheep for the slaughter; under such circumstances it was that the Word of the gospel proved to be their sure refreshment, enabling the apostle to say—"I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

We are not to say, "Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above); or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead). But what saith the Scripture? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

How near does the fountain of cleansing stand to every sin-sick soul, and how near does the word of the kingdom come to each individual mind, "even in thy heart" prompting confession, and promising salvation? No need of undertaking the superhuman task of ascending to bring Christ down, or descending into the deep to bring him up from the dead; but it is only to heed the word of Him that speaketh from heaven—"Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and beside me there is no Savior." O, blessed name above all others! under whose righteous administration of judgment all nations shall bow and every tongue confess. Rock of ages, while the tempest is high, and angry waves break around, let me anchor my frail bark to thee.

TENT MEETING REPORT.

The Wayne Co. (N. Y.) Tent was pitched for the first time the past season at Ira, Cayuga Co., on the 11th of August, and the meeting closed Sept. 5th. Brn. E. F. Sergisson, A. P. Moore and M. R. Miles preached the word, and the Spirit carried it to the hearts of those who heard it, and the Lord be praised, some not only heard and believed, but came out on the Lord's side and obeyed it, and are now journeying with us to the kingdom. Bro. Moore organized the band of believers there, and gave them the hand of fellowship, and they are to-day strong in the Lord. There were ten baptized at this meeting, others reclaimed, and others quickened to duty, while many more were convicted and almost persuaded to become christians. The meeting was going forward with interest when the time came that we had to strike the tent and take it to Ontario, where it had been advertised to be pitched to hold the N. Y. State Quarterly Conference in.

We do hope to see many in the kingdom as the result of the tent's going to Ira. One dear sister, who was a member of the Disciple church, and a number who were Baptists, came out and accepted the truth as preached in the tent, and are walking side by side with the lambs of the flock at Ira. May God bless and save them all in his kingdom, is my prayer.

After the Conference at Ontario, the tent was pitched again at Sodus, Wayne Co., N. Y. The meeting commenced Friday evening, Sept. 17th, and closed Oct. 26th. Brn. E. F. Sergisson, M. R. Milees, and R. H. Bateman, labored in this meeting. This was a place where some of our brethren had the tent pitched three years ago late in the season, when the weather was very bad, and they could not stay very long. It seemed when we came this fall as though we could not have any favorable weather for holding meetings, and every thing that the enemy could bring to bear against the meeting was brought, and it sometimes seemed that we should be obliged to strike the tent and not see any good done in Sodus; but we trusted in the Lord, and held on, and we did see some opposition giving way, and some sinners yielding to be saved by grace. The last Sabbath that we were there our dear Bro. Moore buried nine happy souls beneath the waters of Lake Ontario, and we expect to meet them in our Father's kingdom when Jesus comes.

Now, dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, you who believe in the soon coming of Jesus, I want to just state to you what our ministers have sacrificed to preach the gospel in the tent this season. Brn. Moore and Sergisson have been with the tent the most of the time, the other brethren helping some. We spent unitedly two hundred and twenty-one days, and received in all $88.89. So you see that when we came to pay our expenses we did not have much left. I would say that our dear Bro. Moore has had to leave his family and go away from home, to earn money to pay his debts in consequence of not getting better pay for preaching; and if any of you feel that you would like to bear a part of the financial burden of the tent meetings, if you will send your gifts to me directed as follows, the same will be acknowledged through the Crisis, if permitted, and divided to each as it belongs.

Dear brethren, Jesus is soon coming, and let us all do what we can to stay up the hands of those who preach the gospel, and thereby get as many saved in the day of the Lord as possible. If any send to help in this matter, please send in registered letter, that it may come safe, as I sent my family money that was lost two different times while I was with the tent.

THE DANGEROUS CLASSES OF SOCIETY.

I propose to point out those whom I consider to be the uprooting and devouring classes of society. First, the public criminals. There are in this cluster of cities—New York, Jersey City, and Brooklyn—four thousand people whose entire business in life is to commit crime. This is as much their business as jurisprudence or medicine is your business. To it they bring all their energies of body, mind, and soul, and look upon the interregnums which they spend in prison as so much unfortunate loss of time, just as you look upon an attack of influenza or rheumatism which fastens you in the house for a few days. It is their life-time business to pick pockets, and blow up safes, and shop-lift, and ply the panel game, and they have as much pride of skill in their business as you have in yours when you upset the argument of an opposing counsel, or cure a gun-shot fracture which other surgeons have given up, or foresee a turn in the market, so you buy goods just before they go up twenty per cent. It is their business to commit crime, and I do not suppose that once in a year the thought of the immorality strikes them.

Added to these professional criminals, American and foreign, there is a large class of men who are more or less industrious in crime. In one year the police in this cluster of cities arrested ten thousand people for theft, and ten thousand for assault and battery, and fifty thousand for intoxication. Drunkenness is responsible for much of the theft, since it confuses a man's ideas of property, and he gets his hands on things that do not belong to him.

It is a fact that these three cities pay seven million dollars' worth of taxes a year to arraign, try, and support the criminal population.—REV. DR. TALMAGE, in Signs of Our Times.

THE value of life is only realized in the knowledge and service of God.

HOLINESS, HAPPINESS, AND HEAVEN.

Happiness is evidently the great pursuit of mankind. Numerous paths are tried, and ways sought out to find it; some, by following their carnal propensities and appetites, having very low and groveling views, but little elevated above the beasts; in love with sin, and roll it as a sweet morsel under their tongue, "having pleasure in unrighteousness." Others seek it in a high cultivation of their intellect, thinking in the possession of knowledge and wisdom they will be happy. But, alas! for all human calculation of happiness aside from that revealed in the Bible, the true way to happiness and the way to true happiness. It is holiness without which no man shall see the Lord; an entire separation from sin, and filled with God. For, if a man was taken into the midst of heaven in his sins, he would be miserable.

There is no peace to the wicked in this world or in the world to come. Therefore holiness and true happiness are inseparably connected; and as holiness is the true element of happiness, it is also the essential qualification for heaven.

But where and when are we to be made holy? Why, here in this world, and now, "for now is the day of salvation." Here we are to wash our robes white in the blood of the Lamb. "For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither we are going," "for as the tree falls, so it must lie," and he that is unjust then, will be unjust still; he that is holy will be holy still; and there is no intimation in all the Bible that there is any work of preparation beyond the grave to fit us for heaven. But we must be made holy here; must have every vestige and stain of sin, both inward and outward, washed away by the blood of the Lamb; for there is power and efficacy enough in Jesus' blood to wash us white as snow. And no follower of the Lamb is to stop short of this; "therefore let us go on unto perfection."—Token of Truth.

THE LINK OF GOLD.

Lost—somewhere—a golden hour
Of this glowing autumn day;
Since the sunrise, ere the sunset,
I have lost it on my way.

Was it when I sat and loitered,—
That short chain of such great cost,
Slipping idly through my fingers,—
That my golden hour was lost?

Was I talking of my neighbors,
Weighing all their hopes and cares,
And too full of idle gossip
Well to mind my own affairs?

Did I fret away the minutes?
Was I murmuring? was I cross?
Where could all my sense have flown to,
That I met with such a loss?

For my hour was a jewel,
And with sixty small ones set;
Round each minute sixty seconds
Made the radiance brighter yet.

They could buy me, O what riches!
And what wisdom could they bring!
Each was worth, in its true value,
All the jewels of a king.

For the Lord would give me something,
(If I went to him) for each;
O how precious those short lessons
He can in a minute teach.

O how grand those views of glory
Which a second can make known!
O my hour! O my minutes!
Never more, alas, my own!

Some I might have well invested,
Other people's lives to bless;
Those bright moments, wisely traded,
Purchase healing for distress.

O has anybody seen it?
Seen my precious hour of gold?
I would go to buy another,
But such treasures are not sold.

God prepared for me a number—
Just how few I do not know;
Did he give them for no purpose,
But that I should lose them so?

—Zion's Herald.

FAITHFULNESS REWARDED.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Sometimes brethren labor and sacrifice much for a time, but not seeing the results desired, their faith or courage fails, and they give up the effort. Our brethren in Lewiston, who look for the Lord, have passed through many trials and some reverses. They are generally poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith. Sometimes their courage has nearly failed. The expenses of holding meetings are heavy, their audience and society being largely made up of factory operatives, who come and go as business fluctuates, or changes occur. But a few have held fast to the Word and the work; and while apostacies and perversions have occurred, it has only increased their peace and union, and the Lord has constantly blest their efforts, bringing in new recruits from those of other views, and converting sinners.

The work has been gradual, but constant during the past year. I baptized seven converts one Sunday in October. Since then some others have been seeking the Lord, and we trust have found peace in believing. Some of the chief workers—Brn. Tracy and Jordan—are about to move to other places, and will be greatly missed; but the Lord is filling up the ranks with new converts, and none should get disheartened, but work with good courage. Jesus can work by few or by many, by the weak as well as by the strong, if we are really trusting and following him. He will soon return to gather and reward all his faithful ones. Then we shall all be glad for every effort and sacrifice we have ever made to publish his name and save sinners.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Brn. and Srs. of Connecticut:—Look out upon the fields. Are they not ripening for the harvest? Is the harvest not plenteous? Where are the laborers? There were more preachers and delegates out to our last Conference than for some time past. I have heard from other churches since, which intended to have been represented, and which manifested a desire to take hold and help in the work of the Conference. The camp-meeting this season was the best meeting, I think, I ever attended upon that ground. Some who have felt no interest in the past are waking up, satisfied that the new arrangement of the meeting will add to its interest, and a little fixing of the ground and seats will put things in a condition for a much larger and better meeting than ever before; that is, should the wheels of time roll their rounds another year.

Dear brethren and sisters, pray for the advancement of God's cause in Connecticut. This is a good season of labor. We think December the best time for our next Conference. We have no time or place definitely decided upon yet. We are hoping to hear soon from those who desire a series of meetings, and that those earnest hearts yearning for the cause of God in saving their fellow men will come to our next meeting. The good Lord open the way, that it may be in the right time and place. We pray that Heaven's benediction may rest and abide with this institution. The Lord of glory only can control it, that it may speak well at the great day of final accounts. We pray the great Head of the church, sit thou at the head of this institution; rule in the hearts of the officers and members. We can but exclaim, "Jesus, thou Lamb of God, we need thee every hour." Our lot is cast in an evil day. We pray the Lord that every hindrance may be moved out of the way of the good work of God, that scores this winter may be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, through the earnest labors of the brethren and sisters.

Dear brethren and sisters, who are called into the field of labor, hear the Master saying, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Therefore fear not; let the Word go forth in the demonstration of the Spirit. It will never return unto him void. The Lord will cause it to prosper in the things whereto he sends it.

Yours in the bonds of peace and love, looking for the mercy of God unto eternal life through the coming of Israel's King, the great Head of the church.

TAKE HEED, WATCH AND PRAY.

Our dear Savior was ever cautioning his followers of the danger they were always subject to, knowing that the time would come when many would fall away, and would not endure the sound teachings which proceeded from the Word of God, he says, "Watch and pray." Men seem to be watching everything save Jesus and his words. The Jews, as a people, for not knowing the time of the first advent of Jesus, and not accepting him as their Savior, were left desolate, and their eyes were blinded to their own ruin.

Not only had they turned from the living God, but were worshiping idols made of gold, silver, wood and stone. So far were they away from God, that they knew not Jesus when he did come. Jesus wept over them, and spake as never man spake, and did many wonderful works, but alas! all in vain. To watch and pray they have forgotten; they knew not the time of their visitation.

Jesus has said, Watch! especially to that class in the age in which we live. When about to be betrayed, he leaves his disciples for a little while, to go and pray, and when he returned he found them sleeping. He said unto Peter, "What! could not ye watch with me one hour? Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation.

He knew there was need of much prayer. They were soon to be left alone. The personal watchful care of their dear Lord was soon to be withdrawn, therefore, he said, Watch! Peter soon realized what Jesus meant, for he wept bitterly after cursing, swearing, and denying his Master. Oh, how bitter the tears; but it was too late; his Lord and Master he had forsaken. How sad the picture! We should learn a lesson by this that should long be remembered. Watch and pray!

Paul knowing that after his departure grievous wolves would enter in among the flock to disturb and distract them, warned them to watch and remember. "I have not ceased to warn you, night and day with tears." How true it has proven, never was there such a time known as at the present time. No two watchmen see alike, peace and harmony have left and taken flight. They have neglected the admonition of the Lord, which is to watch.

The church is over-charged. What with? With the labor of love for the lost among us? No. But with surfeiting and drunkenness, and the cares of this life. Too true; and sad to contemplate. Jesus stands at the door; is on the lips of thousands. But are we ready for the grand event? Are our lamps trimmed and burning, as one waiting for their Lord from heaven? Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man. "Let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." Watch and pray.—L. C. R.—Token of Truth.

GEMS.

— One reason why the world is not reformed is, because every man would have others make a beginning, and never thinks of himself.

— Every man has in himself a continent of undiscovered character. Happy is he who acts the Columbus to his own soul!

— True religion will show its influence in every part of our conduct; it is like the sap of a living tree, which penetrates the most distant boughs.

— Never turn a blessing around to see whether it has a dark side to it.

— There is nothing that binds heart to heart so quickly and so safely as to trust and be trusted.

— Despise no enemy merely because he seems weak; the fly and locust have done more harm than bears and lions ever did.

True worth is in being, not seeming,
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good—not in the dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.

— The sweetest intercourse we have with heaven, is when we have least with this earth.

— A year of pleasure passes like a floating breeze, but a moment of misfortune seems an age of pain.

— No man doth safely rule, but he that hath learned gladly to obey.

— The chain of habit is commonly too light to be felt until it is too strong to be broken.

— He is the happiest, be he king or peasant, who finds peace in his home.

— The love of Christ brings us to the Bible. The love of the Bible brings us to Christ.

— Justifying faith is always attended with universal obedience.

"SOMETHING ALWAYS GIVES AWAY."—A christian woman in New York desired to obtain a school-house for the purpose of starting a Sunday school, but was positively refused by the skeptical trustee. Still she persevered, and entreated him again and again. "I tell you, Aunt Polly, it is of no use. Once for all, you cannot have the school-house for any such purpose."

"I think I am going to get it," said Aunt Polly.

"I should like to know how, if I do not give you the key."

"I think the Lord is going to unlock it."

"Maybe he will," said the infidel; "but I can tell you this, that he is not going to get the key away from me."

"Well, I am going to pray over it, and I have found out from experience that when I keep on praying, something always gives away."

And the next time she came, the hard heart of the infidel gave way, and she received the key.

SHAKE OF THE VIPER.

In the last chapter of Acts, we read that Paul had been shipwrecked on the island of Melita. The people gathered sticks to make a fire. I suppose his clothes were all wet, and he was cold. There came out a viper and fastened itself upon Paul's arm, and these barbarians said, "That is a bad man; he has escaped the judgments of the sea, but they have followed him to the land;" and they watched to see him die. But Paul shook the viper off into the fire, and when he ought to have died, he was perfectly well. Then they changed their mind, and they said, "He is a god." Paul could preach to them then; they would believe him.—What good would it have been for him to preach with that viper on his arm? They would have said, "You had better preach to yourself, you need not come preaching to us with that viper on your arm." So there are a great many christians with a viper, not on their arm, but fastened at their heart, taking the very life out of them. And the world has got its eyes on the viper. May God give us grace to shake the viper off into the fire, that the world may not see the viper, but may see Christ in us.

Look at the viper of pride, that has taken nearly all the life right out of the cuurch. You do not have to go to Paris to see the height of the fashion; go to the church on the Sabbath, and you will see it there. People say, "What will my friends think; what will they say at the next dinner party, if I come out boldly and work for Christ, or if I am seen at the special meetings?" A great many professed men of God are just now trembling from head to foot; they dare not go out and speak boldly for Christ. My friends, the question is: Is this God's work, or the devil's? If it is God's work, every man of God ought to stand by it; if it is the devil's, every man ought to do what he can to stop it. I hope the time is coming when the children of God will come together as one man. It will be a happy day for christianity when we get together. These border men are doing more to retard the cause of Christ than the world is doing. It is this compromising spirit that is hindering the work of the Lord. May God sweep it out of the way! Amen, amen.—D. L. Moody.

THE OLD WELL.

"There was a well here," said a bystander, "and very good water used to come from it; but it has been filled up for a long time."

"Indeed! I never knew there was a well here, much less tasted the water. How did it get filled up?"

"Neglect, sir. Some rubbish got in, then part of the surrounding soil; and as it was not cleared out at once, it got worse and worse till it is as you see it—quite choked up. I wonder if there is any water at the bottom?"

These last words set me thinking—"I wonder if there is any water at the bottom?" I thought how much this old well was like some christians. The Lord Jesus spoke of the life he gives to the believer as "a well of water unto him" (John 4: 14); but are there not many who are supposed to be christians in whom we do not see any water, and of whom we can say, as of this old well, "I wonder if there is any water at the bottom?"—Ex.

HOME AND HEALTH.

PREPARE FOR COLD WEATHER.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Most people have to live one life, to know how to live comfortably. One half, at least, of the suffering of our race is caused by ignorance or neglect. Heat is life; cold is death; and how to keep warm is the question with many for this winter. More colds are taken in doors than out. Being out in a keen zero air an hour, is not so bad as to sit in a chilly room the same length of time; for God has so arranged the machinery of our systems that, when we go out into cold air, all the fires within come to the front to resist the cold, and will fight as long as strength or the heat lasts, and then, when it expires, must give up and be taken by the enemy death. To recruit after such struggles we need a warm room, without a dry, hot air, which has but little natural heat. There must be moisture in a room, to retain heat natural to our systems.

One of the best arrangements is to put a window on the outside casing in winter. This will preserve the oxygen in the room, which is so necessary to life. Burning up the oxygen by hot stoves with single windows gives you a cold atmosphere on the floor, and cold feet. The double window plan will afford a better moisture for a sitting room than by having water on top of a stove, which many neglect. Even the space of air between the two windows serves as a regulator between too cold air without and the hot and dry within. The double window plan will save fuel enough in many houses to pay the expense in one winter, besides the other advantages. Try it, and you will avoid many of those strange feelings of cold chills running up and down your back, giving you a sore throat, or neuralgia, or sick headache, or rheumatism, which are so prevalent in these days of improvements for saving fuel. The old-fashioned fire-places never burnt up the oxygen in the room, which is the cause of so many strange diseases which call for such an everlasting lot of patent medicines, and quack doctors to peddle them. Keep a good, warm, healthy atmosphere in-doors, and you can resist the cold outside much better.

Life depends upon health, and health upon heat, either by exercise or otherwise. Many have neglected to put on their flannels early enough, or else do not put on enough to keep warm, and have shivered around a few days longer to save a little, and taken cold, and grumbled all winter, and paid a doctor more, perhaps, than a whole suit of good warm clothing would cost. The first of September is about the time you ought to begin to increase your clothing. One man told me he was not going to put on his flannels till Thanksgiving; he wanted to toughen himself for winter. His foolishness was the cause of a cold all winter, consumption the next summer, and death the next spring. Keep warm every hour. Some do not think, if they are going out to ride in the cold, to get warm before starting, yet by doing so the contrast from heat to cold will be less. I always get well warm before starting.

We need stronger or more oily food in winter than in summer. These pretended new scientific ideas about eating, followed up, will drive people South every winter to keep out of the cold weather of the North, where they were born. Pork, or other fat meat, is the fire of the engine that goes up grade with a load. One will go down grade with no steam or fire. Warming food and clothing will keep the machinery of life running much longer and easier than the fashionable clothing and food of these times.

PURE AIR.

"How can rooms, halls, and churches be warmed, and at the same time effectually ventilated, during cold weather, at a moderate expense?"

Pure air is one of the things most indispensable to secure health of body, clearness of mind, and length of life, and yet the majority of people do not appreciate its importance, nor take the necessary steps to secure this greatest of blessings; but instead, they contrive every way and take the greatest pains to deprive themselves of it, by shutting it out of their houses in every possible manner. There can be no greater mistake than this. It insures disease of body, dullness of mind, and a shortened life. During warm weather, it can always be obtained "without money, and without price," but when winter comes our houses must be warmed and made comfortable. To do this requires much more expense. The question is, will it pay? Will it pay not to do it? If a few paltry dollars is of more consequence than "a sound mind in a sound body," then it will not pay. But if health is better than money, then it will pay.

The best way is to freely admit that it is expensive, but worth the money it costs. If Benjamin Franklin thought that 'a penny saved is a penny earned,' he was also equally sure that 'health is wealth.' Instead of asking ourselves with how little fuel can I warm my house by stopping the flues and the beneficent window cracks which the carpenters have left, the question should be, how much can I afford to pay for fresh supplies of pure air, moderately and equally warmed and distributed without waste. I can not help believing that the sum of family health and happiness in a generation would be more increased by liberal expenditures for this purpose than for any other.—Herald of Health.

SLEEPLESSNESS.

Sleeplessness is so dreary—so brain wearing, so brain inflaming—that I would cheerfully give my experience, if it would be the means of soothing one poor sufferer to the land of dreams for a few hours. Feeble persons are generally the ones to suffer most for that pleasant and life-renewing rest, which comes by sleep. I am well satisfied there are no rules for inducing sleep, which may not sometimes fail in extreme cases, but I will name a few practices which, if well attended to, generally make one forget what is about them.

In my own case, I have practiced successfully eating sparingly of early and late suppers, oftener none at all—avoiding all arguments on contested subjects near night, as well as any train of thoughts rehearsing injuries, even if real, as all of these are likely to have a bad effect upon a person who is apt to be sleepless at night. Offer a heart-felt prayer for a forgiving and quiet spirit before retiring, and continue it after your head presses your pillow, in your heart, if not audibly, and in some cases this will have a charming effect. Special prayer brings sometimes great and remarkable blessings. Some persons are kept awake at night by eating a late dinner of meat, and still feel no pain or especial distress; but the nerves of the stomach are complaining in their peculiar way all night.

Many persons become so excited with the meeting of friends that sleep departs for a time. There is probably nothing better, after cultivating a tranquil mind, than exercise in the open air to induce sleep. Any thing which will enlist the powers of the mind, and make one forget themselves entirely, works a good effect. Attending to the wants of some great sufferer than themselves, will often accomplish good for the actor.—Ex.

TOBACCO AND INSANITY.—The following facts have been compiled from a French publication, and are startling enough to have restraining influence on those who are not already confirmed tobacco-users:

"From 1812 to 1842 the tobacco tax in France produced 28,000,000 francs, and the lunatic asylum contained eight hundred patients. The tobacco revenue has now reached 180,000,000 francs, while there are forty-four thousand paralytic and lunatic patients in the hospitals, showing that the increase of lunacy has kept pace with the increase of the revenue from tobacco. These statistics, presented by M. Jolly to the Academy of Science, in connection with the closing words of his speech, contain a frightful warning to those forming the pernicious habit of smoking, now increasing so rapidly. The moderate use of tobacco, and more especially of the pipe, produces a weakness of the brain, and in the spinal marrow, which causes madness."—Ex.

LABOR FOR JESUS.

I. I. LESLIE.

TO E. R——.

Labor on for Jesus;
Labor day by day;
Patient in His service:—
He for all will pay.
He will help thee always
Every task to do;
And when all are finished,
Give reward to you.

Labor on for Jesus;
Do not think it vain;
Thou shalt in the harvest
See the garnered grain;
And the stars shall glitter
In thy crown of light,
Through the long forever—
Jewels there so bright.

Labor on for Jesus,
Though thou weary grow,
And thy words be feeble,
And thy steps be slow:
Though thy strength diminish,
And thine eyes grow dim,
Still be faithful, doing
What thou canst for Him.

Labor on for Jesus—
What if poor and weak
Thou art, and but little?
Thou canst for him speak:
Thou canst tell the story,
How he saves from sin,
Taking all the sorrow
From our hearts within.

Labor on for Jesus;
Labor day by day:—
"Well done good and faithful,"
Soon you'll hear him say.
Then no more the toiling,
Weariness and strife—
Then the golden city,
Then the crown of life.

LAID ASIDE, BUT STILL USEFUL.

WM. KELLAWAY.

Beloved! my heart is meditating a subject of comfort to the dear laborers who for some reason or other are at present laid aside from public service in the assemblies of God's people. How many there are who with fervor and tears have discoursed and exhorted among the saints, who at present, either through sickness or for some other reason, are now prevented from engaging in that work which is so much their Savior's approval, their own heart's delight, and their brethren's joy. No longer can they meet in the ecclesias of Christ; no longer be consumed with burning words of wisdom and love in the hearing of heirs with them of the grace of life. And as they lie at home ill, or are prevented by the fault of others from thus serving, they mourn their condition, their inability to speak to the Church's edification. Here, too, is the evangelist, worn out or proscribed; the hearts he would reach and move, he sadly reflects, are unreached, untouched; for God has by an inscrutable permissive ruling allowed his dropping out of active service for a time. He remembers how dark are the multitudes, how hard, how graceless, how sinful, how miserable, how hopeless; and then, when he reflects on his own confined condition, or, what is as bad, that by ecclesiastical systems his tongue is tied, he laments a bitter lamentation. He cannot understand why, if God really desires the salvation of men, he so hedges up and keeps in abeyance those ready and willing and even desirous of furthering the same object as delights his own great heart of love.

Brethren! I must say a word of consolation to you, as a brother in the Christ, and a child of the "holy Father" of Jesus Christ our Lord. How do you know that, although you cannot publicly minister, and proclaim with voice of emphasis the elevating gospel of God, that you are not still useful? Aye! now listen: I will not suggest a chimerical possibility, but I will show you a fellow-saint, who, although laid aside, was nevertheless of account in the interests of his Lord. Indeed, when he was thus removed he was most serviceable.

Think, then, of the beloved Paul, "a servant of Jesus Christ." Remember how he was, for Christ's name, cast into a Roman dungeon. What might have been his thoughts while in that prison? Might he not, being "such an one as Paul the aged," have recollected the tiny churches he had planted, and regretted that he were not at liberty as a wise "planter" (for was it not said, "Paul may plant"?) to supply supports to these heavenly saplings, to strengthen them against the rough winds of the world? Might he not have mourned his incarceration, seeing that errors were rife, and needed his masterly knowledge of the Scriptures and inspired utterance to show that they were darnel, and not the good seed of the kingdom? Might he not have wept that a world was perishing, and that laborers to warn this dying world one the less by his confinement? The church needed him for wisdom and for contention; the world required him as a preacher of the gospel. O, might not Paul have exclaimed, "Lord, why lay me aside"? And yet he was laid aside. It was permitted by God to a wild-beast power, a power having ferocity without understanding, to lay hands upon this man of God, and thrust him into prison. What a loss, man would say, to the early Church; what a deprivation for the heathen. Ah! but man does not know all. Human sense judges by present circumstances; but God foresees gigantic results and blessed ends through temporary inconvenience and unpleasantness. So it was with Paul. Although laid aside from church and world service; although removed from a sphere where impassioned words full of eternal truth might resound through the air and fill a vast concourse of hearers with feelings of reflection, regret, repentance or joy, he was not without his use.

It was during Paul's jail life that he wrote his Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 2nd to Timothy, and Philemon,—letters which have been the study, the help, and the gladness of many generations. It is a compensation indeed for the apostle that, although he could not serve for nearly five years the church of his day through the power which hindered, the church should be served by his writings during that period "all the days, even to the end of the age." O how many have blest this laid-aside "servant of Jesus Christ" for his work in that dungeon of Rome! And who can say that you may not be, although in smaller measure, serving, if not many generations, at least a goodly number of saints, by your letters which you send forth from your sick room. Your record in black and white may perhaps be more beneficial and enduring, coming from out the depths of your affliction and experience, than it would be if simply uttered by the voice in a common-place way, amid the counteracting excitements of the passing hour.

Again; what an opportunity did prison life give the apostle to exhibit some of the most lovely of the ornaments with which true Christ-likeness bedecks a man. Here is that inimitable jewel patience; what a good condition was Paul in to exhibit this "grace of patience." Such is thy condition also, laid-aside man of God.

Moreover Paul had another advantage in his prisoned condition. No doubt he was often solitary, except for that Roman guard that paced up and down outside his cell. The guard was frequently changed, every twelve or twenty-four hours; then a new servant of the State took his place. To these did the apostle preach, by virtuous conversation, by sobriety of manner, by quiet resignation, by songs of hope, by earnest prayer; all done more or less under the very eyes of his heathen guard, his daily attendant. No doubt, these attendants marked the apostle; and when at night they went to their wives and families, friends and homes, would speak of the venerable prisoner and his faith. Indeed we know from the apostle himself that "the things which happened unto him" fell out "rather to the furtherance of the gospel," than to its suppression. So much so indeed, that he says, in writing to the saints at Philippi—"My bonds in Christ are manifest in all Cæsar's court, and to all others." Who knows but that there may be some, shut out from the usual advantages of hearing that Word by which faith comes, that are attending you in your affliction, who are to read you, to whom you shall be a clear epistle of God, written not with ink, but with the Holy Spirit.

And see, too, while Paul was at Rome in prison, Onesimus, sometime servant of Philemon, whom he had robbed, and whose house he had forsaken, having doubtless heard of Paul from his Christian master, searches him out, and hears from his lips the gospel of peace and salvation. He is begotten as a son in the faith; becomes a free man through a bond man! It may be that some astray sinner may be helped by you to peace, and become to you a son in Christ Jesus—a Benjamin, the "son of your sorrow." What did Paul say of this Onesimus? He called him, not only "my son Onesimus, which I have begotten in my bonds," but his "own bowels," whom he would have retained for ministration to his personal needs, if that were lawful; for he had found him "profitable"; and he recommended him back to Philemon as a "brother beloved," especially by himself. There may be in thy season of apparent dearth of fruit some Onesimus, whom thou mayest reclaim from his vices, and find to be a brother, a son, a helper, and in every way profitable.

And last, the brethren were gainers, after all, through Paul's incarceration. His example was powerful. They missed his words, but they learned to be faithful and constant by his endurance And O, in thine inactivity, as compared with what was once thy work, mayest thou not also be an example of "suffering affliction for Christ"?

So, after all, although the apostle was laid aside from more ostentatious work, he was not a vessel of nought in his forced retirement. The Christ was magnified in his mortal body, and excellent service was rendered by him to the cause of the true Royalist.

My brother, my sister, laid aside! why art thou cast down? Be not dispirited. The most lasting work, the best of work, is not that which is done openly and in the crowd, but secretly and in retirement. You are not a Moody and Sankey to set the world by the ears; seek not to be. Thou mayest be very much as Paul the prisoner of Jesus Christ; thou mayest be doing a work amid tears, that shall command the "Well done" of blessed lips. At the very worst, if thou art a true child of the Father, thou canst not be without some fruit, that shall be found unto praise and glory at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints. May that day come, and not tarry. Amen.

MARANATHA.

As the first appearance of Christ was the great and blessed hope of the old dispensation, so his second appearing is the great and blessed hope of the new. As that was the supreme event of the past, so is this the supreme event of the future.

His second appearing "without sin unto salvation," in its manifested grandeur and glory, will contrast amazingly with his first appearance to put away sin, in humiliation and shame.

He came once as a servant of servants; he will come again as the King of kings. He came before as a captive led from prison and from judgment; he will come next as "A mighty conqueror,

Who spoiled the powers below,
And ransomed many captives
From everlasting woe."

He came once as a lamb; he will come again as a lion. He came once as a man; he will come again as a God. He came first as a light to lighten the Gentiles; he will come again as a "flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

He came first as a suffering Savior; he will come again as an awful Judge. Through all eternity we shall look back upon the first and second advents of Christ as supreme events in the history of time, but the manifested glory of his second appearing will always shine brightest.

"That day" is the great central subject of unfulfilled prophecy. On that day the only king who has a right to reign, will receive his crown and his kingdom; his people will be glorified, and the groanings of creation will cease.

The New Testament points us forward to his second appearing more frequently than it points us backward to his first appearing. The subject is met several hundred times in the New Testament. One verse of about every twenty-five contains such reference. No other theme is used more frequently to stimulate the church to fearless witness-bearing, patient suffering, heavenly mindedness, and to universal diligence. No other theme is used more frequently to arouse a deluded and slumbering world. It is held forth in the New Testament everywhere, as the very pole-star of the church.

The Apostolic Church for three centuries was all alive to this hope. Says the commentator Hodge, "The second advent of Christ, so clearly predicted by himself and his apostles, was the object of longing expectation to all the early Christians. So general was this expectation, that Christians were characterized as "those who love his appearing." Says Mr. Barnes, "The earnest expectation of the coming of the Lord Jesus became one of the marks of early christian piety."

The church, secularized by Constantine and corrupted by the Romish hierarchy, was too well pleased to reign as kings and priests without Christ, and "that blessed hope" was obscured.

During the great Reformation of the sixteenth century and the times of the English Commonwealth, this hope was again revived. Then followed a season in which the doctrine of Christ's personal appearing and reign passed somewhat into neglect and contempt.

Mr. Whitby, who was an Arian, wrote against pre-millennialists, and introduced the idea of the spiritual reign of Christ for a thousand years, which he confessed was "a new hypothesis."

The mystical view, which postpones his appearing for at least a thousand years, and relaxes that constant watchfulness enjoined by the Scriptures, has prevailed widely for one hundred and fifty years. But this neglected and glorious doctrine, which is related to almost every other doctrine of the Scriptures, and almost every duty of life, is reviving again throughout all Christendom.

Men who read the New Testament with their eyes closed by prejudice against this glorious theme, tell us that they see no interest or practical importance in it. I will select from the specimen passages to show all who will read, what interest the New Testament writers felt in this subject and what use they made of it.

Does the spirit of slumber come over you, and do you long for livelier emotions and a more wakeful spirit? Read and ponder the Savior's repeated account of the awful condition of the infatuated world, the electric suddenness of his appearing, and the thrilling admonitions to unceasing watchfulness. At midnight the cry was made: "Watch therefore," etc. Your Redeemer and Judge and King may come like lightning at any moment. "Therefore let us not sleep," etc. "Let your loins be girded about," etc. Do you heed motives to diligence in the service of the Lord? Read the parables that set forth your duties in his absence, and your proportionate reward when he comes. Talents are committed to you for use in his absence. Diligence on your part will secure a plaudit and a reward when he comes. Pounds are delivered to you with the injunction, "Occupy till I come."

When he returns, your reward is proportioned to your fidelity. "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me." The Apostolic Church in its unequaled missionary zeal, was inspired largely by this "blessed hope." The most solemn and emphatic admonitions to preachers are enforced by the coming of the Lord. "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word; be instant in season, out of season. . . . Keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ. When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

SPECIAL TRUTH.

JAMES PIGGOT.

Knowledge has been a thing of great interest to the children of men in all ages, but it seems to me that in the present day knowledge is in greater demand than in any previous time. Before going further, please read a few scriptures. "Wise men lay up knowledge; but the mouth of the foolish is near destruction." Prov. 10:14. "An hypocrite with his mouth destroyeth his neighbor; but through knowledge shall the just be delivered." Prov. 11:9. "The heart of the prudent getteth knowledge; and the ear of the wise seeketh knowledge." Prov. 18:15. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee." Hos. 4:6. The simple reading of such passages as these shows at once the high position knowledge occupies. Indeed, it is the starting-point of the christian race. It is a knowledge of our fallen condition that leads us to think of a Deliverer; it is a knowledge of the commands of God, and of his matchless love, which constrains us to yield a willing obedience to the will of our heavenly Father.

We might follow the intelligent disciple from the starting-point in his christian experience till his very latest hour in the Master's service, and it would be found that his every action is the result of knowledge. Indeed, it is impossible for the Lord's children to take one step in the right direction without first consulting their Guide Book. The Psalmist says—"Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path"; and with all who intend to make progress, the Word of the Lord must be their daily study. Very many people talk of knowledge as if it were something which could be obtained without much effort, thinking themselves perfectly safe while resting in the words of Paul when he says—"What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." This is exactly where I rested, and I am forced to the conclusion that it is the place where the church of the present day is sitting, and, like the Jews in the apostle's day, claiming to be the children of God, while they are only stumbling-blocks to those who want to press forward.

A knowledge of Christ Jesus is most essential, but it is only a first principle. We must grow in knowledge, as there are special truths which belong to each generation, and must be sought out that we may walk in the light. I ask, What will it profit us, if we spend our days talking of the beauties of Eden, of the fall of man, or of the journeying of the children of Israel in the wilderness? These things are of no practical importance to us. It is true we may learn much by understanding them, but let me tell you, there is such a thing as rightly dividing the Word of God; there is such a thing as "meat in due season," and it is this great truth I wish to illustrate.

Let us consider God's message to that generation which lived in the days of Noah. Noah was told that every living creature was going to be destroyed by a flood of waters, and that there was but one way of escape; and Noah, having full confidence in God, went directly to work, laboring day after day for one hundred and twenty years. He was the only one who was entrusted with a knowledge of salvation from the great calamity which was slowly but surely approaching. He was the only one commissioned to tell that people their danger, and make known to them the only way of escape, which he did faithfully. But how was it that he was so unsuccessful as a preacher? Well, one reason was because his message was new; it was out of the old and beaten path their fathers trod. It was opposed to the most learned men of that time; it was opposed to science and reason. "Preach to us that every hill-top under heaven is going to be covered by the swelling of waters and the fall of rain! The idea is simply absurd." Thus they despised Noah and his message, till the flood came and took them all away. So we find that there was but one portion of revelation which had special reference to those who lived just prior to the flood, and Noah and his family were saved by a knowledge of that one thing. Hear what our Savior says regarding those who perished in the waters: "They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not." It was a want of knowledge, then, which brought about their ruin. Their eating, drinking, planting and building was all right and lawful. Indeed, nothing is laid to their charge but the disregard they manifested to the preaching of Noah.

You remember how the children of Israel were carried away captives into Babylon on account of their sins, and with what lamentation and weeping they spent the greater part of those seventy years; but mark the change and tell me what it was that became of such interest to them? The answer is, the Lord was going to deliver them, so it seemed to engage their whole attention. They were not satisfied with the bare knowledge that God at some future date was going to work out deliverance for them; no, they were anxious to know something regarding the time when they would be released. And they obtained the necessary knowledge. We are told that "Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem." This, then, was the truth which specially belonged to that people, namely, their release from Babylon; and they were found in the line of duty intelligently waiting the Lord's time, and so were taken home to their own land.

I might furnish many illustrations of this plain truth showing that there has been and always will be truths which are specially adapted to each generation. Let me give one more look at that people who lived in the days of our Lord. Their zeal and devotion toward God have been almost unparalleled. You might ask them almost any question regarding the Old Testament scriptures, and they are ready to answer. They had knowledge in abundance, yet with all their intelligence we are told that it was for want of knowledge they were cast off. Hear what our Lord says—"When he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." Luke 14:41, 42, 44.

The plain lesson taught in these verses is this, they were cast off because they rejected those things taught in prophecy, which had a direct bearing on them. They took refuge under popular teaching saying, "We are Moses' disciples," and so were blinded to the one and only thing that could save them from that destruction which soon after came upon them and their doomed city, Jerusalem.

The lesson I wish to impress is this: there are truths which specially belong to us, and must be diligently sought out by us, that we may escape the snare, and receive the blessing of the Lord when he comes to reward his waiting ones.

SANCTIFICATION AND JUSTIFICATION.

A. G. GORDON.

What are the points of difference between these terms in a Scriptural sense? Is not sanctification absolutely essential in order to obtain justification. Does God justify any one while indulging in any known sin? Is not a person sanctified when consecrated to God, soul, body and spirit?

Does God hear prayer if we "regard iniquity in our hearts." Does God, when he forgives us of our sins and justifies us, leave the roots of sin within us and merely cut off the branches? Is that conversion? Is it not rather in submitting our hearts to God wholly and unreservedly, that we obtain pardon?

Now I would ask, Can any one do any more than that at any subsequent time? May it not be that it is in consequence of our weakness and inexperience in regard to spiritual things when first converted (being but "babes in Christ"), that when we obtain more knowledge of the way, we call it a new consecration. Paul says, in Romans, "Much more then, being now justified by his [Christ's] blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. John also speaks of the blood of Jesus Christ cleansing from all sin. Is not a person sanctified when "led by the Spirit of God"? and are we justified while walking after the flesh? Is any sin justifiable? Are not all temptations from the devil? And if we resist them do we sin? If there is no yielding are we not guiltless? But if we cherish any of those evil thoughts or desires, then we fall into condemnation and are not justified until we repent.

We read that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." "And the life that we now live we live by the faith of the Son of God." I think if any one is living and walking by faith on the Son of God, entirely, he is both sanctified and justified; and unless he is he is neither sanctified nor justified. Paul exhorted his brethren to present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which was their reasonable service. Would they have been justified in withholding their reasonable service, when they knew the requirements? Certainly not.

Paul to the Corinthians also speaks as unto carnal and not spiritual, and yet he calls them brethren. Were they living in a justified state? I think not. They once were justified, else he would not have called them brethren. What was the trouble? They had fallen into condemnation by walking after the flesh. They had neglected the means of grace, and were disobedient children.

I understand that justification is the result of sanctification, inasmuch as we understand the will of God and do it. We set ourselves apart for his service, and this service is the result of faith, and we are thereby justified. "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Can there be a position more enviable in the christian life than to have peace with God? Certainly one must be free from all sin whatever to be in that place.

In regard to the baptism of the Holy Ghost, I believe that to be a special work—an effusion of the Spirit—a gift of God to the sanctified and justified believer—the effect of faith on the part of the individual. Certainly one cannot maintain a justified position if he is conscious of a special work of grace being in store for him and he neglects to avail himself of its benefits. Therefore one is justified in walking up to the light that he has; and unless he does that he will fall into condemnation. For this reason I think that justification follows and keeps in close proximity to sanctification. I admit that sanctification may have a different meaning, in some instances, than to set apart, having reference to the illuminating and strengthening power of the Holy Ghost; and this is the meaning that is probably attached to it by those that use the term in the popular sense.

Accepting that as one meaning, it follows that justification is a legitimate result of that higher and more glorious condition, which is only attainable through the channel of faith, which, being kept in constant use, will certainly absolve us from condemnation.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

MINA P. GOWEN.

More than eighteen hundred years have passed away since these words fell from the lips of the prophet of Nazareth, yet they have lost none of their significance. They still remain an unfulfilled promise. What they were to those fishermen of Galilee they still are to the true disciple of Jesus to-day. "I will come again." He was going away to leave those loved ones who had forsaken all and followed him. He knew all the hardships through which they must pass. He knew that he must leave them like sheep among wolves, and to comfort and sustain, as well as to teach them the whole plan of this redemption that he would not only save them from sin, but also bring them out of their graves, he gave his word that he would come again.

He had a purpose in going away. He must "prepare a place." A kingdom had been promised that one day he would come in possession of; meanwhile he must return unto his father. How sad the parting, yet how joyous the prospect. With what sadness and pain were the old familiar paths traveled over, and a crucified, and risen, and coming Lord preached to a proud and perverse generation, who for their toil and tears gave them persecutions and afflictions, yet while sorrowful, they were always rejoicing in hope of the promised return. Thus they came forth out of prison doors, and fresh from the lash, "instant in season and out of season," doing their Master's business. Thus onward through the dark ages of Papal persecution this promised return has sustained men and women on the rack and at the stake.

And now we are perceptibly near the fulfilment of the promise. There are yet a few that wait for the kingdom of God, while the great mass are looking for a spiritual reign.

A few are expecting the "very same Jesus." "I will come again," has but one meaning to them; and oh, how comforting is the hope in these days of pride and delusion, these days of dishonesty, deceit and crime, while men in high places are crying, "Peace and safety," thus rejecting timely warning, and instead of crying, "Behold, he cometh," they say, "All things continue as they were from the beginning," thereby rejecting the last message of mercy, setting at naught those that are waiting for the promise. But it finds a response in the hearts of the little flock as it did in that of the beloved John, "Amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus." And he will come; those who have so long waited, and have died in faith, shall yet behold him, coming with power and great glory, not for a sin-offering, but unto salvation to every one that believeth.

He is coming! Earth, sea, and sky proclaim it. He is coming. The distress of nations, the general state of society and the political world, speak in thunder tones of something about to take place. O, toil-worn, weary pilgrim, look up. "The night is far spent; the day is at hand." Soon weeping will turn to joy. The opening heavens will soon reveal him for whom we have waited. The mossy old grave yards will give up the dead, and mortality will be swallowed up in life, eternal life, forever with Jesus, where there will be neither sorrow nor crying, sickness or pain, for this mortal state with its woes will be forever past, and the saints safely sheltered in the kingdom of God to go no more out forever.

May you and I, dear reader, be among the number that shall wait for the Son of God from heaven, for unto such he will appear unto salvation.

WHAT ARE WE TO JESUS.

J. R. COOPER.

We hear a great deal about "what Jesus is to us," but let us consider a moment "what we are to Jesus."

WE ARE HIS SHEEP. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My father which gave them me is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." John 10:27, 28. Here we learn we are Jesus' sheep, and he assures us his sheep shall never perish. He knows his sheep; he is acquainted with them altogether. He so loves his sheep as to give his life for them, therefore they must be very precious to him. When one of his sheep gets lost, he leaves the ninety and nine and goes after the lost one. No matter how far it strays, nor how rough the way, nor weary the journey, he never returns until he has found it, and he rejoiceth more than the sheep that is found. He maketh his sheep to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth them beside the still waters." A sheep will never lie down in a green pasture unless his hunger is satisfied. Jesus says: "He that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." John 6:35. So tender are we to him, that "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom" Isa. 40:11.

WE ARE HIS FRIENDS. Jesus says, "Ye are my friends. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." John 15:13. Only think of a dear friend who we so love as to be able to lay down our life for, and then we can appreciate what we are to Jesus. He says: "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you." . . . "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you." John 15:15, 16. Here we are told Jesus keeps back no secret from us, but has told us all things he has heard. We do not tell our common friends all we have in our hearts, but it is only to our most intimate friends we unbosom "all things." We also choose our most loved friends, as the Master has chosen us—so we must be very dear to him.

WE ARE THE FATHER'S GIFT TO HIM. There is nothing we prize more than a gift from one we love, as a dear father or mother. That Bible my father gave me on his death bed is prized above silver or gold. Jesus says: "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me. . . . While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost but the son of perdition; that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. . . . I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. . . . Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one; . . . and the glory which thou gavest me I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou hast loved me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me." John 17; 9–23.

Did Jesus ever pray to the Father in vain? Will not his prayer be answered? He says he has lost nothing that the Father gave him but the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled. He prays the Father to keep us from the evil in the world. O how little we realize what we are to Jesus, and how much the Father loves us—even as he loves Jesus. How little we appreciate his great love!

WE ARE THE BRANCHES. Christ is the vine. The branch must have the same life of the vine in order to bear fruit. If the branches were all cut off, the vine would bear no fruit. The life of the vine extends to the very smallest branch, and sustains and nourishes it, otherwise it would bear no fruit. The vine is at present in heaven, but the life runs through all the branches here on earth, and there is no other way, at present, Jesus can manifest any fruit to the world, except through his members. How very essential, then, as fruit-bearing branches, we are to Jesus.

"WE ARE MEMBERS OF HIS BODY, of his flesh, and of his bones." Eph. 5:30. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many." Now "if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it." 1 Cor. 12: 12–14. Not one of Christ's members can suffer without his suffering. He is represented as the head and we the body. The body cannot move hand or foot unless the head says move. Therefore Jesus says, "without me ye can do nothing." The man of God is as completely controlled by his head—Christ—as the members of our body are by our head. Being in such close relation to Jesus, we are very near and dear to him.

WE ARE HIS ESPOUSED. Paul says: "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." 2 Cor. 11:2. In Solomon's Song we hear the "Beloved" saying to his espoused: "O thou fairest among women . . . Behold, thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes. . . . Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee. . . . Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirgah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners. Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me. . . . My dove, my undefiled is but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the only choice one of her that bore her. . . . How fair and pleasant art thou, O love, for delights." Cant. 1:15; 4:7; 6:4, 9; 7:7.

Thus we see we are as precious to the blessed Lord Jesus as he is to us.

Rochester, N. Y.

I COUNSEL THEE.

Who counsels me? I want to know who gives me advice before I take it? Christ says, "I counsel thee." Ah, I know he is infinitely wise and good. What dost thou advise me to do? I counsel thee to buy of me gold. Buy gold of Christ? Does he sell gold? Yes, he advises me to buy gold of him and I shall be rich. Ah, Lord, how can I buy gold? What have I to buy with? Listen, soul of mine, to the spirit voice telling me what to bring to buy this gold with—thy poverty. The reason many do not buy this gold is, they are not poor enough. O, let us make haste to be poor, that we may buy, for this gold will pass current in another world. This is gold for eternity. And raiment is spoken of. Can I buy raiment of Christ? Yes. White robes are waiting for me to wear now, and I give for the same poverty, miserableness, blindness, nakedness; truly he might well say, "Not as the world giveth, give I unto thee." The world never gives on these terms. How often have we had occasion to say, "I would buy, but I cannot afford it." Spiritually there is no reason why any one should be poor. We may be rich; the shame of our nakedness need not appear, for raiment is provided. We may have good spiritual eyesight, for eye-salve is offered us. Now who will be rich? Who will be clothed? Who will be anointed?—Ex.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

As the time draws near for the extra session of this body to be holden, we hope that all our brethren who have an interest in Christ's cause, as connected with ourselves as a people, will make this meeting a subject of earnest prayer, that God may so overrule all its deliberations and action as to result in the harmony and efficiency for christian labor of all interested.

The primary and particular object of the session is to give all the patrons of our publications a more equal and less burdensome representation in doing the business of the Association. As the body interested is scattered over a very large territory, considering its numerical strength, the most wise and judicious rules should be established, to give the most distant sections from the center as equal a representation as possible. We believe this is right, and should be sought with prayerful sincerity without partyism, sectional prejudice or strife.

From what we have learned of the feeling of our brethren, we think that very nearly all are disposed to make the proposed change, and accomplish the above stated objects. We apprehend that there will be no party strife, but that which will be most needed is the wisdom that cometh down from above, that a Constitution, securing the most righteous and equitable privileges to all may be adopted. We do most earnestly desire that the wisest and most prudent counsellors will be selected to represent the different sections and churches interested in this christian convocation. Let all be careful to come prepared to present the required credentials.

The by-laws of the Association require that "All delegates sent by churches to the Advent Christian Association be furnished with written credentials, or forfeit their right to membership." "Preachers offering their names as members of this Association are required to bring a certificate of good character from a christian church, and to show that they themselves are co-operating with this Association." These rules are for the safety and purity of the body, and should be observed by all. Let all the members, who meet, pray much in their closets before assembling, and those who are not members pray earnestly that the God of order, justice, equity and truth, may guide his servants in these important deliberations and decisions, so as to best serve our soon coming Redeemer, and secure to ourselves an inheritance with the saints in light. THE SITUATION.

The situation of the Papal power is continually becoming more critical. Since the 20th of September, 1870, when it lost its vestige of political dominion, the head of that church, with his cunning, Jesuitical advisers, has been seeking some means, by which he could again seize the political reins of some government, but thus far no one has come to his rescue. As said Cardinal Cullen in a speech at a grand reception, Aug. 21st, 1866:

"There is no friendly power now capable of supporting the head of the church, or of maintaining the doctrines and practices of our holy religion." In speaking of the Pope, he says: "Nearly every thing has been taken from him . . . To all appearance, the time is now come when the Catholic world must look on while the scanty remnant of his kingdom, and even Rome itself, shall become the prey of the sacrilegious enemies of the Catholic church. Humanly speaking, the crisis is at hand, and in the hour of his supreme distress, our Holy Father looks in vain for help from the powers of this earth."

At that time the Pope still held the political control of Rome, but "Rome itself" is now in the hands of the enemies of the Catholic church." Garibaldi says: "I believe there is not in all the world a country less Catholic than Italy." Cardinal Cullen says the Italians "avow the deadliest hatred to the Pope and to religion." The Pope has no reason to expect the least help from the Italians, who have supported that church for the last thousand years. But Christ sent an angel to John in A. D. 96, saying the time would come, just before his second appearing, when the "woman—the church at Rome—would be hated, lose her dominion, and be treated as a loathsome harlot. That time has now arrived; hence it is certain the second advent of our Savior is near at hand. About all the signs of his coming that were to be seen in the last generation, are now before us as passing events. The great prophetic streams which run to the end of the present dispensation, are now just at their point of termination.

The Roman correspondent of the Boston Pilot, a Catholic paper, says: "Good Romans see no other future than a future which will, in all probability, outstrip in horror and bloodshed the work of destruction. . . . in Paris." At a great meeting of Catholics in Dublin, a resolution was presented, containing the following: "We view with grief the apathy with which the governments of Europe have permitted his Holiness to be assailed in his rights, and stripped of his territories." The taking away the dominion of this power is one of the last things Daniel beheld in its history. We have reached this marked event, and christians have abundant reason to lift up their heads and rejoice, because their redemption draweth near.

The convents in Italy, and even of Rome itself, are "being emptied of their monks and converted into public institutions." This is a heavy blow, and strikes at the very heart of the system that has given the priests their wonderful power over the people. The buildings are being used for schools hospitals and public offices. "Thirty convents have recently been appropriated by the State, some of them bearing very historic names." It is said that in Rome "Protestantism numbers more than forty chapels or places of worship, open every Sunday, and several times during the week." Bless the Lord. M. G.

Westfield.—The meetings in Westfield are continually increasing in interest. The Lord has done wonderful things in this place of late in savings sinners. Bro. and Sr. Heme[illegible] prayed before the meetings began, that some of the most difficult cases in town might be brought to Jesus. Their prayers are already answered. We are expecting great things from the Lord. Our meeting thanksgiving day was blessed. Those of long experience said it was the most heavenly one they ever enjoyed. Our hearts were running over with thankfulness, and tears of joy flowed freely from many eyes. We can hardly expect a sweeter meeting this side of paradise.

Yesterday (Sabbath, Nov. 28th), was a precious day. The house was crowded with very attentive audiences. A goodly number remained in the inquiry meeting, and several gave up to Jesus, and were blest. We are looking forward with pleasing expectations to the coming week. Members of different churches unite with us in the good work, and all is peace and harmony in Jesus. The spirit of unity is prevailing, and christian joy is abounding in hearts that were dark and gloomy but a few days ago.

Praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men. His mercy endures for ever. Let every christian labor earnestly to bring poor sinners to Jesus, that they may be ready to meet him at his coming. M. G.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

The revival interest is increasing in all directions. The reports are heart cheering. The earnest, successful labors of Bro. Moody, and the interesting reports of his meetings, as given in the New York Daily Witness, and other papers, have served to awaken thousands of professors of religion to the fact that they are living far below their privilege, and thereby causing many to stumble over them to perdition. It is really alarming to see the amount of lukewarmness that has been in the churches for several years, with few exceptions. Pride, fashion, folly, worldly amusements, extravagance, hatred, corruption, lasciviousness, and abundance of secret sins, have been the prevailing elements among the mass of professors, accompanied by the example and sanction of many ministers. As a result, "pure and undefiled religion" has been scarce, and has been reproached because it would not bend to the low standard, and countenance the doings of those who support church fairs, festivals, oyster suppers, concerts, bazaars, dancing and novel reading. The people of the world have looked on these things, till they have lost nearly all their confidence in the christian religion as a power to save men from wickedness.

The movement on holiness during the past few years, has opened the eyes of thousands to the fact that a pure-hearted christianity does really make a "new man," causing him to be perfectly honest in all his deal, kind, gentle, and patient in his family, faithful in the performance of all religious duties, earnest in efforts to save sinners, while he leads a self-denying, and self-sacrificing life, that he may be useful to others who may need his services.

Any careful observer, or even careless one, can see there is a pressing need of a revival of pure Christianity, in order that sinners may be reached, and turned out of the broad road that leads to destruction. They say, If we cannot have a better kind of religion than much that we see among professors at the present time, we choose to remain as we are, and run the risk of being saved; for if such and such ones, who belong to the church, are christians, we think we have nothing to fear. Thus vast numbers stand at the present time, excusing themselves from becoming the disciples of Jesus, because of the great number of lukewarm professors, who are doing no positive work in the vineyard of the Lord. Their first love is gone; peace and joy are gone; love for sinners and enemies has departed; they are walking in darkness, full of doubts and fears, all unready for the coming of our divine Master. They are like the barren fig-tree, producing only leaves. Having lost their communion with Christ, and consequently their joy and peace; they have turned to the scenes of worldly amusement for comfort and satisfaction. They are seeking rest, but finding none, and can never secure it only by full re-union with the Lord; then they will have no desire for festival and bazaar amusement. There is no joy so sweet as that found in Jesus, when fully consecrated to his service. The comfort of an hour spent in an inquiry meeting, trying to lead sinners to the Lamb of God, far surpasses any thing ever enjoyed by the most enthusiastic supporter of church sociables, concerts, festivals, picnics, or fairs. It is thus ordered by the Lord, and no one can make it otherwise. He who would enjoy this life should first give himself to Jesus, and then labor to persuade others to become his disciples.

The chief want at the present time is not great preaching, or more of it, but an army of christian workers to talk and pray with sinners personally, pleading with them in earnest zeal and loving sympathy, to give themselves up to the dear Savior. If professors of religion only go regularly to hear preaching, attend prayer and conference meetings, and yet say nothing to the unconverted about coming to Christ, they cannot expect to see much accomplished. Every member of Christ's body should be a working christian, imitating the example of our divine Master, in improving all opportunities to persuade men to confess and forsake their sins, and seek salvation through the Son of God. He who rests in a do-nothing state, will soon find his own heart is becoming barren, his sky cloudy, doubts flocking into his mind, his peace departing, his assurance gone, an aching emptiness all that remains. The first work in a series of revival meetings is to arouse this class of idlers, and get them to confess their backslidings, and to begin to work in the Lord's vineyard. When they wake up, who have thus stood in the way of sinners, and caused them to turn away from the means of grace by their unchristian lives, then the unconverted can be reached; but it is of but little use to put live children into the care of a dead mother. For years the body of church members have been so low, so unlike Christ, that young converts have seldom lived more than six months, before they were again floating in the current of the world, destitute of even the first principles of practical Christianity. Is it not time to inquire for the "old paths?" M. G.

THE GATHERING GLOOM.

As the gloom of night unrolls its dark curtain from the East to the West, first burying in obscurity the lands soonest illuminated by the early rays of dawning, so the gloom of human empire first spreads its darkening folds over the countries and tribes of the sun-rising nations, rolling the tide of social night back westward, where the evening twilight deepens into the shades of midnight. This has been the order of human glory and greatness through all the historic ages.

The glory and riches of the golden head of Babylon was succeeded by the less desirable silver breast of Persia, and was followed by the still less valuable brazen bowels of Grecia, and then degenerated into the baser metal—the iron legs of Rome—which still declined into the factious, warring, inharmonious alloy of "iron" and "miry clay." This is God's representation of human, political, and social progress, notwithstanding all the boasted triumphs of the generations, as they act their part upon the stage of life.

The gathering clouds of ancient heathenism are rapidly mantling the Western slopes of human habitations, as Pantheism and Spiritualism open the pit of superstitious blasphemies, while the unscriptural faith in a god, consisting in spiritual, invisible principles, without personal existence or particular location, are intercepting the last illuminating rays of divine truth.

The ancient games are being revived through all the Western World, with all their unholy and debasing influences.

Man worship is raising its hideous form in the sunset-scene, as political gamesters and financial oppressors are carried in stately pageantry to their graves, while the heavens echo with God-forbidden praises of the unholy dead. The habit of deifying men after death, because they have succeeded in gaining some high worldly position by the wicked intrigues of political wire-pulling or have heaped up treasures by ungodly extortion, robbing the laborer of his just hire, or the widow of her lawful rights, is rapidly blackening the moral heavens, and offering a premium for sin.

All communities are being seriously disturbed with internal strife and fearful apprehensions of approaching civil and foreign wars. Humanity is universally convulsed, and, like a dying man, is seeking relief by some new remedy or change of position. Kings and emperors tremble on their thrones, and anxiously inquire of their chief captains if they have sufficient men and arms to defend them. The earth, with its strange fits of perturbation, increases the gloom of the hour, as its foundations shake, and its skies pour out devastating floods, its winds roar and whirl with destructive violence upon the land and sea, the heavens exhibit strange sights, and upon the earth blood, fire, and pillars of smoke add to the fearfulness of the deepening gloom.

A fearful night approacheth, in which the happy work of saving the lost must forever cease. The gospel sun is setting behind the western mountains. Christian, work while the twilight gathers its gloomy shades around you, and the death-pall is already in angel hands, to be drawn over the expiring nations, and bury in everlasting darkness the light and glory of a cursed world.

But is there no silver lining to this dark cloud? Shall earth know a bright dawning beyond this gloom of evening? Has the Creator and Ruler of the universe appointed an endless day of earthly glory? Yes. A heavenly radiance beams from the immortal lining of the intervening cloud. A cloudless day, all bright with heavenly glories, peaceful with God-established harmonies, and endless, because enjoyed by immortality, sends forth its morning star, and rolls up its noon-day sun beyond the shaded evening, beyond the gloom of midnight darkness.

O day of divine appointment, thy beams shall illumine the place of perfect happiness, the eternal home of the saintly family! O Jesus, come, and translate us from these gloomy shores of mortal strife, and plant our feet upon the curseless soil of the new earth, where the sunbeams never scorch, and the star beams never chill. Hasten to raise us above this gathering gloom, into the ever blessed radiance of Him who loved us unto death. J. C.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

We were never able to present more grave and important news to the household of faith than we are able to sketch this week. The prophetic nations—the segments of the Roman Empire—are stirred from centre to circumference. The movement is clearly to us a prophetic one, because it is bringing the Roman nations into exactly the condition and position indicated by the prophecies in the last great national struggle.

Turkey is now the central figure in the drama, just as the prophecies indicate, and just as many of the most honored expositors have anticipated. It seems from our latest files from the East that the Turkish government, in the estimation of all the Powers, is sinking very fast, and that they understand the time has come at last that the Sultan must succumb to the long-continued and insupportable pressure brought to bear upon his government. Since his credit and his ability to procure the sinews of war have failed, it has become clear to all that the pumps of the sinking ship can be no longer worked, and that she must go down.

It was evident, from the tone and acts of the great Powers, until within three or four weeks, that they considered the settlement of the present Turkish insurrection hopeful; but the tables have evidently turned, and nearly all hope of such a settlement is abandoned. The insurrectionists see the sinking condition of their oppressor, and are rapidly renewing their efforts in the fearful struggle. The Northern Powers, under these circumstances, are manifesting great activity in preparing for the final issue of the "sick man's" disease, and especially for the partition and possession of his coveted estate.

The trap has evidently sprung upon all the nations prematurely, or before they had completed their arrangements for the long-expected event. Russia's fixed policy at first was to settle the insurrectionary trouble of Turkey, as we said, but it has been changed, as is expressed by the London Times:—

"The announcement of the Russian semi-official papers that something must be done to secure the fulfillment of Turkish promises to the Christian Rayah marks a new phase in the policy of the St. Petersburg Cabinet. But a few weeks ago the same journals were authorized to tell us that to meddle with Turkish affairs would only harden the Sultan's heart and preclude reform; to-day opposite convictions are expressed. We shall be hardly far wrong in tracing the change to the more determined attitude recently ascently assumed by the Austrian Cabinet."

The same paper expresses Russia's policy upon this question thus:—

"Turkey is the bad boy of Europe, but the Great Powers, unfortunately, cannot easily agree upon the reformatory discipline that ought to be enforced. Russia alone has a definite policy, and she has taken advantage of the hesitation of Germany and Austria, the do-nothing of England, and the incapacity of France, to come forward again as the special and dictatorial protector of the Christians under Ottoman misrule; to declare that Turkish promises are worthless, and that "in any case an end must be put to the present sad state of the Christian population."

All doubtless know that there are a number of millions of the Sultan's European subjects who are members of the Greek Church, of which the Czar of Russia is its spiritual and political head; so that he claims a divine right to protect the members of his own Church. In view of this fact the editor of the London Times says:—

"We cannot, however, put too much faith in any peaceful prognostications founded upon what appear to be the interests or motive of the Russian Government. It has placed itself in a very dangerous position by ostentatiously running ahead of the other Powers in its pretence of interest in the happiness of the Christians of Turkey, and in a very positive promise of giving them help."

It has been said that Russia's "triumph in this struggle would depend upon the co-operation of Germany, Austria and Italy. A grand movement is now in progress to unite these Powers in the programme of operations. The Prime Minister of Russia, Prince Gortschakoff, although a few months ago at Berlin, is again sent there to consult personally with Bismarck, the Emperor William, and the Austrian Embassador, so as to make sure the co-operation of these great Powers. This is reported in the Boston Journal thus:—

"A special dispatch from Berlin to the London Morning Post says it is reported that the conferences between Bismarck, Gortschakoff and the Austrian Embassador have shown that the three Powers they represent are in perfect harmony on the Eastern question."

But it is anticipated that when the general European war comes, involving the downfall of Turkey, the Ultramontanes will take advantage of the times and strike to put down Italy and Germany by the assistance of France and Spain, and perhaps the Communists. To balance the sheet and give Russia and Austria the large portions of the Sultan's possessions, Germany and Italy are to be defended against the Papists and the threatening classes in the West. A London editor says:—

"But it is feared that Germany, Austria and Russia may quarrel and go to war upon this Turkish question. It is certain that France would gladly avail itself of a European war to ally itself with other Powers against Germany. The Jesuits and Ultramontanes are hoping to gain great advantages from a general European war for themselves and for France."

To make this alliance of the four Powers still more secure, the Czar and the King of Italy have appointed to meet at San Revas soon, evidently to complete the arrangement for the great movement.

It has been known for a long time, and reported as being discussed in diplomatic circles, that England has purposed that if the Turkish Government was overthrown, and its territory divided among the great Powers, she claimed the privilege of taking possession of Egypt as a part at least of her portion. And now, just at this important juncture, suddenly and unknown to the other nations, she purchases of the Khedive of Egypt twenty million of dollars worth of Suez Canal shares, so as to control the Egyptian highway of the nations, thus cutting off Russia from sailing her fleets to India, and gaining an advantage in controlling Egypt. A New York editor says of England:—

"Great Britain appears to be girding up her loins to be ready for any emergency which may arise out of the Eastern question. The Mediterranean squadron has been strengthened, and the vessels stationed at Malta have been ordered to cruise in the Adriatic. Diplomacy of late years, especially since the seizure of Danish territory by Prussia has been so uncertain that the British are apparently unwilling to be caught napping on the present ominous occasion."

England has also appointed a Financial Commissioner to Egypt, to become a kind of head, we suppose, of English authority there.

These circumstances to us are very ominous, for they seem to perfectly agree with the prophecies as we have understood them for thirty years. All intelligent eyes, of all classes, are turned to watch with great anxiety the events which must very soon transpire. A writer says, speaking of Turkey—

"The Russian rule, despotic, military, but well-organized and efficient, might be a God-send to a people plundered by governors whose weakness and corruption match their selfishness. There is probably little loss to humanity in the circumstance that when Russia AGAIN pushes her boundary southward, France and England are likely to have 'other engagements' that will prevent their interference."—Ex.

"The Paris correspondent of the London Times gives a conversation which he had some time since with 'one of the leading minds in Russia.' 'Great things,' said this person, 'have since (the Crimean war) been effected in our country. The Emperor has given to serfs the feeling of liberty; to masters respect for independence. The army has been remodeled, and in the plains of Asia it puts in practice the theories taught it. Russia, in a word, is preparing. Yes, Constantinople is its great aim, its most passionate aspiration.'"

Laying all these facts by the side of the prophetic page, there is such a wonderful coincidence, such perfect harmony, that we feel shut up unto the faith that the record of human strife is nearly filled, and that the last battle is about to be fought. O wonderful thought! strange conclusion! But God has spoken, and his Word must be accomplished. The end is near. Prepare! Prepare! J. C.

MAN'S IDENTITY.

Whereas, after listening carefully and impartially to a number of sermons on the doctrines of the Second Advent Church, delivered by men of that faith; and also reading a number of pamphlets on the same;

And whereas, said sermons and pamphlets do teach that man is wholly and only composed of just such matter and gases as the rest of the animal kingdom, only in a different combination;

And whereas, science and common observation clearly prove that man's material organization, after death, does return to its original elements in the great laboratory of nature, and that all of these atoms may again become the component parts of countless other human beings;

Therefore, if I should accept the above views, I would be forced as an honest man to doubt the doctrine of the resurrection, by which man's IDENTITY can and will be fully established. Or, putting the question more directly, Do you believe there is any part of me that can never become a part of any other being? If so, what is it? If not, where is my identity?

By finding a solution for these questions, you will greatly oblige An Inquirer.

We do not see that our "Inquirer" has any more ground to doubt the possibility of the resurrection of the dead, provided the entire man returns to the ground, than he would have if a part of man does not die; unless he believes that the supposed undying part is to raise that which is dead. But we are not aware that any one believes such an absurdity. It must be just as difficult to raise a dead man, if a part of him remains alive, as it would be if every part were dead. The Bible most plainly, repeatedly and positively affirms that the dead shall be raised. Said Paul: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" Acts 26: 8. Dead what? If there is a part that never dies, it cannot rise from the dead; hence it is not included in the term "resurrection of the dead." According to the Scriptures, it is the "dead man" that is to be raised from the dead. The one who once lived, died, and remained "among the dead," is the one to be raised from the dead; otherwise, there is no resurrection of the dead. No matter how widely the component parts of "man's material organization" may be scattered after death, the Lord has the power to rearrange them again, thus raising up the identical man who died.

It yet remains to be proved that the essential dust of one man can become a component part of another man. Chemists assert that it cannot.

Two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time. If a wolf eats a man, he throws off a corresponding amount of matter; otherwise, he would add to his weight and size a quantity equal to that of the man eaten. No particles of matter are annihilated; hence the materials composing the man must continue in existence after death; and all that is needed is a power to reorganize him again. The One who made man at the first has declared he will yet do this wonderful work; consequently, he who denies the resurrection of the dead asserts that God has not the ability to do what he has promised to perform. According to the Scriptures, there can be no future life if the dead rise not; as Paul says—"If the dead rise not, ... then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 16–18.

The identity of man consists in his material organism, and when that is destroyed he ceases to be a man. Without a body he is nobody, knows nothing, and is neither a subject for reward or punishment. When the Lord "formed man," he made a personal being, with body and parts. When that formation is taken in pieces, reorganization is necessary before the man can live and act again. Hence the necessity of the resurrection of the dead, in order to give a dead man future life in the world to come. If it were not for the resurrection, we should have no hope of a future existence. The Christian religion is the only one that teaches this glorious doctrine. This we get through Christ, who is "the resurrection and the life." John 11: 25. Says the apostle—"I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others that have no hope. . . . For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." According to the Scriptures, the dead saints will all be raised when Christ comes, and "then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 13, 16, 17. EX-SPEAKER BLAIN ON THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

Now that the school question is being discussed, and all sorts and conditions of men are expressing themselves upon it, it may not be uninteresting to give the views of the Hon. J. G. Blaine, late Speaker of the House of Representatives, as presented by him in a letter written no later than the 30th of last October. He calls attention to the fact that the dread of sectarian legislation began very early in our history, and has been manifested repeatedly. The first amendment of the Constitution, drawn up bp Jefferson and Madison and proposed in 1789, declared that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This was prompted by the fear of Congressional interference with religious liberty, and any State is consequently, and under the powers conferred by another amendment, left free to have an established church if the majority of the people of such State so please, and some States did actually exercise this power. Mr. Blaine believes that although there may be now no danger of a revival of church establishments in this country, the possibility of such an untoward step should be avoided. In remedying this Constitutional defect, he suggests that an end be put to the school question also in this way: "Just let the old Jefferson-Madison amendment be applied to the States by adding the following to the inhibitory clauses in section 10, article 1, of the Federal Constitution, namely:

"No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or, derived from any public fund therefor, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect, nor shall any money so raised ever be divided between religious sects or denominations.'"

This certainly would leave the schools non-sectarian. It would prevent, on the other hand, any massing of the members of the Church of Rome in any State to obtain such an amount of political power as would enable the Vatican to secure support directly from taxation. It would appear also to cut at the root of all sectarian appropriations of the public money, whether school fund or not. But whether such a school system would, under the above restriction, be established in most of the States so that these educational institutions would not be assailed and criticized, as at present, is not so certain. However, the danger indicated by Mr. Blaine is a real one, and he deserves all credit for the far-sighted suggestion he makes; and in settling the Church and State question for ever, the school question will be greatly simplified. Whatever plans Cardinal McCloskey may have matured for the capture of the common schools by the hierarchy would be frustrated by Mr. Blaine's scheme. The late Speaker of the House of Representatives has made a notable contribution to an issue of primary importance in current politics.—N. Y. Witness.

A Request for Prayer.—My daughter is a great sufferer from a disease from which she can get no relief. Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, will you pray for her that she may be healed in body and spirit? She is a lover of Jesus, and has many trials. Do not pass this request by unnoticed, but make it an object of your care. Your sister, looking for eternal life when Jesus comes,

Mrs. D. Marsh.

The good things of the saints are not dispensed out of the basket of common providence, but out of the ark of the covenant.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Warren Tefft.

Editors of the Crisis:—I have been visiting the churches in Conn. for a number of weeks, and find them rising in spirituality, and that there is not only a general desire to hear the evidence of Christ's coming preached, but that these truths are taking deep root in the minds of many good-hearted christians who have hitherto been very much prejudiced against them. We hear such testimonies as the following, as we often do: "I thought I would just go and sit near the door, so as to get away as soon as services were over; but I never heard such preaching before; it was all Bible," etc., etc. This not only shows what deep prejudice has existed in their minds, but it also tells us in unmistakable terms that God is preparing hearts and opening avenues for the reception of these "last-day truths," that have not existed before. It also shows not only the importance but the necessity of giving them great prominence in all our preaching.

O how my heart has been made to leap for joy of late, after giving the "signs of the times," and showing the necessity of Christ's second advent, with fear and trembling, to hear some one arise and say, "My dear brethren, you know I do not belong with you in church capacity, but I do believe that the Lord is soon coming," "these things are truth," etc. And yet we have brethren who think we ought to be very cautious how we preach these things; while God says if we see the "sword coming and blow not the trumpet," and any perish, "their blood" will he "require" at our hand.

Again, people do not come to our meetings to hear the same things preached that they can hear in their own churches, and if they do hear them they go away disappointed.

Dear brethren, we have but a few days to work. O how important the work to be done! What mighty consequences may result from our labors for good or for evil,—a soul saved, or eternally lost; brought to Christ, or left to perish, to die! Praise the Lord for his goodness. How I do praise him that he makes me an instrument in his hands of leading souls to Christ. You who have money, are you doing all you can? If you could only hear the testimonies that I do, from those who have been saved by having the Crisis and other Advent papers sent them, you would all respond at once to the call to circulate those excellent periodicals. Many have said, "I first saw a tract, which led me to believe."

Bridgeport, Ct.

From Sr. Emery Marston.

Dear Editors:—I wish to say to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad that I have been much interested in reading their letters to the Crisis. I love the Crisis for the sweet spirit of union in Christ which it exhibits. I have been especially benefitted by carefully reading an article from Bro. John Finn, entitled "Be ye also ready." It helped me to take up a cross which I had long neglected. Though I clearly saw it to be my duty to establish a family altar in my house, I excused myself on one plea and another until I read the article mentioned above. I have been blessed in discharging this duty.

Dear brethren and sisters who are struggling on alone, establish a family altar. Pray with your children. Don't let them be able to say as a little daughter of a christian father said last winter, "I never heard my father pray." Don't be afraid of the cross; it is not heavy; it's weight is nothing; it is hollow. March up to it boldly; take it up, and carry it till Jesus comes. Then lay it down at his feet, and receive the glorious crown.

Jesus is soon coming. Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and try to live so as to be able to say with good old Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

Ashland, N. H.

From Sr. Ellen Duffell.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I was born in the year 1812, in Pikeland Township. My mother was a Presbyterian, but from a child I was inclined toward the Methodists. I got religion at the age of fifteen, and joined the Methodist church, and then I saw that I must be buried with Christ "by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Our beloved pastor was not willing to baptize me, for I was christened when an infant. Bro. Moore, the Baptist preacher, baptized me.

I thought that I was walking in all the way of the Lord till after I was married and removed to Philadelphia. There was where I first heard of the Advent doctrine. Bro. Dougherty was Methodist class leader, and he embraced the Advent truth. He came to my house and said, "Sister, we have been wrongly informed on the Bible." I replied, "It has been a mystery to me what went to heaven when men died, except the breath that went out of our nostrils"; and then I learned that the dead sleep in Christ till the resurrection morn, and the wicked were to be burned up root and branch. Mal. 4:1. Then I saw where the new earth was to be—the saints' rest, when Christ shall come and reign, King of kings and Lord of lords over the whole earth. The joy that this heart received no tongue can tell. The Bible seemed like a new book to me. Three years ago last September, I laid all upon the altar of the Lord as a living sacrifice for Christ, and I have great peace.

I am afflicted with a complication of diseases, and having faith that God heals the sick sometimes in answer to prayer, I am encouraged to ask for the prayers of christians, that I may be healed.

Glassboro, N. J.

From Bro. T. W. Leavenworth.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in the Lord:—I am trying with all my heart to live a holy life, that I may be found without spot and blameless, but I find it almost impossible to live so. I am surrounded on every side with worldliness and sin. I feel almost as if I was living in a heathen land. Christian voices I have desired to hear, but alas, they are few. The name of the Lord I scarcely now hear, except in profanity. I have desired to see and to be with the children of God, but am deprived of that privilege. I am lonesome, discouraged, cast down, afflicted and sick. O, who can pity me in my distress? Who can pray earnestly to God for me, and believe God will hear their prayer?

Brethren and sisters, pray for me. I have been sick with consumption about four years. I have confidence in the prayer of faith. I believe in it with all the powers of my being. If I could have the genuine prayer of faith offered up to God for my recovery by those who are willing to be anything or nothing for Jesus' sake, I believe the work would certainly be done. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." I am very poor in flesh, and am very weak and feeble, so much so that I hardly feel able to pen these lines. Unless the blessed Lord hears prayer in my behalf, I must go down into the grave. O, I cannot bear the thought. I desire to live, if it be the will of God, that I may serve him.

O, dear children of the Lord, I believe if I can have your earnest prayers, I shall recover. Will you pray for me? Do pray to God that I may be healed. I would feel very much pleased if some of the dear children in the faith would write to me, and strengthen me in my faith, that it may fail not. Your Bro. in hope of eternal life.

Roxbury, Litchfield Co., Conn.

From Bro. A. Andrews.

Dear Crisis Friends:—The Bridgeport A. C. church, though small, is the most united, and free from fanaticism, and the best working church, in my opinion, of any of our churches in this State. We believe in organization, and in keeping out all special messages outside of the immediate coming of Christ. We never shall know any more about the day of the Lord's coming than Noah did of the flood, knowledge of which was only made known to him the day he was taken into the ark, and from a wicked world. We further believe in building up ourselves on our most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. Yours in this hope.

Bridgeport, Ct.

From Bro. Thos. Rines.

To all the dear Brn. and Srs, Greeting: The Lord bless you and help you in all your lawful undertakings. Pray for us in this place. We are weak in ourselves, but strong in the Lord, giving all glory to him. I shall stay at home this winter. The friends in Smithfield have hired a hall, and want me to preach for them. There will be service every Sunday. Most of the people are Free Will Baptists. There have been no meetings in the place for four years, excepting what I have held. There is quite an interest now to hear of the Lord's coming and kindred doctrines. Come over, brethren of like precious faith, and help us. I live two miles from Smithfield Village, and my post-office address is Smithfield, Me.

From Bro. Nath. Reed.

Editors of the World's Crisis:—I am still striving to live a christian life by denying myself of all ungodliness and worldly lust, and trying to live soberly and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile bodies, and fashion them like his own glorious body, whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself. Bless his holy name forever for his great and precious promises, that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature.

O, how good the Lord is to poor, sinful, unworthy man. I feel that I cannot find words to express my gratitude for his goodness to me. He has preserved and protected me through many trials and troubles to an advanced age. I am almost seventy-five years old, and fifty-three or four years of that time I have been trying to serve him. I never was sick a day in all my life so as to be confined to my bed.

I am happy this morning, feeling my trust and confidence is in him. My heart responds, "Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." O, I do rejoice that the prospects are so bright. O that he would search my heart and cleanse me from all unrighteousness, and fill me with his love. Pray for me, dear brethren, that my faith fail not in these last days, for I do feel that the last struggle is fast approaching. Let us be faithful a few days, or weeks, or months at most, and He that is to come will come and will not tarry.

Waymart, Wayne Co., Pa.

Bro. A. J. Young, Vallejo, Cal., writes Nov. 19th, in private note:—

"The church is doing nicely. Harmony prevails. Our congregations are large; much larger than any other in town, and on the increase. Bro. Carpenter is improving in health, and likes well. His wife is enjoying better health than she has for some time. We have met with blessed success in all our undertakings in assisting them with those things they required for house use. He seemed to get right hold of the hearts of the people, so that nearly every one helped in good earnest, and the Lord has blessed wonderfully, just as he always does when his children trust in him.

Bro. Carpenter is liked by all who have met or heard him. They can't help it, some how or other. We think he is just the right man for Vallejo. We had baptism last Monday week. Two were made happy by obedience. We think the church stands as good, and stronger than ever. Bro. Mathewson was with us last Sunday. We liked him much. He is a strong man, and has got backbone—just what is needed now-a-days.

The church in San Francisco is doing well. The Santa Clara church is in a blessed condition. All the Seventh-day friends have come back into the church. Harmony prevails. M. G.

THE DUNKARDS.

The Dunkards of New England, under the leadership of Eld. Wm. C. Thurman, seem to be forming an alliance with the non-resurrectionists. They unite in starting and sustaining meetings in various points of the country. We learn that recently Elds. Wm. Doughty and L. L. Howard have commenced meetings in Lewiston, Me., where they advocate the duty of obtaining the "gifts of tongues," and other miraculous "gifts," together with the doctrines of trine immersion, and the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. They have re-immersed several disciples. Eld. Thurman has been called to their aid, and visited them to establish the "Marcion" and Dunkard notion of trine immersion.

Obituaries.

Rogers. In Milldale, Conn., Oct. 31st, 1875, Laura E., wife of George Rogers, aged twenty-seven years.

Sister Rogers was the first one converted in the revival one year ago in Milldale, among the first baptized, and the first one taken away. Her loss is deeply felt, not only by a companion and two little ones, but by those with whom she has been accustomed to meet at the house of God, and mingle her voice in praise to Him for his loving kindness in bringing her out of nature's darkness into the light and liberty of the gospel. Among her last words were, "Jesus is all and in all to me. I am dying, but the will of the Lord be done." May this affliction be sanctified to the good of the mourning ones, and also to the little church of which she was a member; and when, as long foretold by prophets, they that sleep in dust shall awake and sing, may it be theirs to enjoy with our dear sister the rest that remains for the people of God. E. C. Woodruff.

Shepard. In Woodstock Valley, Ct., Sept. 15th, 1875, Sr. Lillian Shepard, aged seventeen years.

Sr. Lillian was the eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Shepard. For the first time death has broken this dear family circle, and at an hour when least expected. Sr. L. was a young lady of great promise and of brilliant hopes. She was highly esteemed and much beloved by all who knew her. She experienced religion a number of years ago, and was a lover of the Lord and his coming. She has fallen young, but she rests in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. Her death is a source of deep grief to her parents and friends, and a great loss to the church and community. May God sanctify this deep affliction to her dear family, and bring them through grace to enjoy each other's society in that world where no farewell tear is shed. Her funeral was attended by the writer, assisted by Eld. H. Davis. Text Jer. 15:9. P. S. Butler.

P. S. You will please publish these accompanying lines upon her death, in connection with this obituary. P. S. B.

Worth. In Moultonborough, N. H., Nov. 21st, 1875, after a lingering illness, caused by being thrown from his wagon, Bro. Ayers Worth, aged sixty-seven years.

He leaves a faithful wife and daughter to mourn; but they do not mourn without hope, for they believe, as did also Bro. Worth, that the great Life-giver will soon come and give eternal life to all his people. This hope sustained our dear Bro. to the last. T. W. Piper.

Patch. In Bartlett, N. H., Nov. 20th, 1875, Levi Patch, aged sixty-eight years.

We trust he will awake to everlasting life on the morning of the resurrection. Words of consolation from 1 Cor. 15:21, by the writer. John B. Dearing.

Barton. At Newport, N. H., Sept. 20th, suddenly, Hosea B. Barton, aged sixty-three years. H. A. Culbertson.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Pottsville, Pa., Dec. 3. In consequence of the overstocked condition of the Eastern markets and of the close of navigation, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company will to-morrow direct the stoppage of thirty of their forty collieries in this region, the remaining capacity of four thousand tons daily to continue, to supply the furnaces and railways in the vicinity.

About five thousand men and boys are thus thrown out of employment. Twenty-five individual collieries will also suspend during the week, and it is thought that by Dec. 15th the suspension will be general and over ten thousand people will be out of employment in the Schuylkill region. The suspension may not last over two months, though fears are entertained that work will not be resumed before spring.

Work while the Day Lasts.

The Missionary Association formed at Pittsfield Campmeeting, Sept. 9th, 1875, proposed to procure a Tent for Mission work in the Eastern part of Maine, said Tent to be raised in one hundred shares, and all to be taken up by the first day of May, 1876. The Tent, with a small one to go with it, will cost only three hundred dollars. Dear Brn. and Srs., shall we not have one hundred shares, of $3.00 each, at once? Those who are not able to take one, can get several to club together, and send in a pledge by postal card, to be paid the first day of May, 1876, and help to send the gospel of the kingdom into some new places while time lasts. Working time is almost over. Shall we not have a response to this by mail from all who are able to help? We shall order the Tent made at once.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.

BY CHAS. L. IVES, . D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred by express. Agt.

"WHY WILL YE DIE?"

LUCY M. CHAFFEE.

The day's work done, in this still, sweet hour,
I sit in the twilight gray,
And over and over my thoughts repeat
What I've read in the Book to-day—

How the Son of God for us all was given,
Revealing an open way
From sorrow and sin and eternal night
To the joy of an endless day.

How strange at the sound of his "Whoso will"
So few to the refuge fly!
How strange within sight of the way to life,
So many pass on and die!

A cleansing fount prepared for us all,
And yet not all made clean?
An open way to eternal life,
And some miss an entrance in?

A fold, with a gentle Shepherd's care,
Yet many a lamb astray?
A Father's house with its "room for all,"
And many a child away?

When the day shall come, and the Judge shall give
To his saints his welcome, then
How sad the thought, "It is not for me—Too late! But it might have been!"

South Wilbraham, Mass.

THOUGHTS ON HOLINESS.

Being carefully and constantly guided by what I understand to be the teachings of Scripture, on the subject of holiness, it is enough for me that God should have given his holiness as the reason why we must be holy. The authoritative signature and seal given to his first chosen people was, "Be ye holy, for I, the Lord your God, am holy." To this Peter refers when he says, "Because it is written, be ye holy, for I am holy." It is saying no more than is true, when I say, God cannot save us in an unholy state, without compromising himself. Let every one that would even by implication hope to be saved without holiness, stand appalled at their own ungodliness. Holiness in itself cannot be conceived of mixed up with sin. Therefore, unless there is a sense up to reality in which believers can and do live in an unsinning state, they never can be holy. To show that this can be, and how it is done, is the object and subject of this article.

The fountain of inspiration from which I propose to draw my conclusions is this:—"Having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." If these promises do not insure to us that which is commanded and can be accomplished, they are not promises. And what is it that is commanded? It is that we, as candidates for heaven, cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. "Perfecting holiness in the fear of God" is a remarkable phrase. Holiness in itself is perfect—cannot be made holier. This perfecting of holiness in us, in the fear of God, is therefore a mode of speech to accommodate the sense to our capacity of comprehension.

The idea of perfecting holiness in us is by and through a positive growing abhorrence of evil, which is sin, and an increasing will to cleave to that which is good. Show me a person in whom these affections were never prominent, and I will show you one who was never thoroughly convicted, nor genuinely born again. Show me one in whom these affections have waned, and I will show you one of the "Sardis" order—one in whom, if he is not now actually dead, is actually dying; and unless he is immediately re-invigorated, he will die. All because your works have not been found perfect before God—defective in what ought to be done, if sin was hated as holiness hates it, and is therefore a forfeiture of all heavenly light.

The spirit of holiness, who is the first and the only efficient agent in conviction and conversion, lays the foundation in a holy abhorrence of sin. And it is in the perpetuation and growth of this holy hatred of sin, that religion grows and develops. Hence "the perfecting of holiness in the fear of God," is effected by this cleansing of ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, because our holy reverence of God is such that it promptly and cheerfully resists and resents everything that is displeasing to him. Such is its holy reverence for him, that the fear of displeasing him, when certainty is a little doubtful, gives forth the most unmistakable sign that the agent is understandingly perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

The most hopeless type of faulty professors is such as are always trying to satisfy themselves that they can do things, or wear things that they want to do, or might wear, and about which they are not satisfied, but assume that they will be saved, because they did not allow these little matters to be displeasing to God. The mind that will risk displeasing God to please itself, is the godless mind.

This perfecting holiness in the fear of God, as all this ground is, is well guarded. It is as good as said, that until our process of cleansing extends to everything, we are doing nothing in the main thing—this perfecting of holiness in the fear of God. It being always understood that the evidence of a holy mind is to be found alone in those persons in whom is seen, at all times, the sacred guardianship of the holy fear of sin—a manifest abhorrence of it, so that abstaining from all appearance of evil, is not a matter of disciplinary enforcement, but of inward spiritual taste; such as would hold them back, even if public opinion was out of the way. As long as there is any hankering after things pertaining either to the filthiness of the flesh or the spirit, there is no perfecting of holiness going on in us, and where this is not going on in us, religion is dying out of us; for it lives only upon perfecting holiness in the fear of God. You ask my views on personal holiness. I prefer to give you its history, in its own outworking and onworking, to giving any profession of it. I hope no one, north or south, will ever profess the possession of personal holiness, only on the ground of this experience—I set out in hatred of sin—it has become something like an instinct of loathing.

It is no cross to me to shun it and denounce it in any of its forms. Indeed the very apprehension that the atmosphere of a place frequented for pleasure is tainted with the sensual, is enough for me. When common sense tells me I am perfecting holiness in the way of my abstemiousness, and would be impoverishing it in any looser way of living, I can say, to abstain is infinitely more happifying to me than to partake could be. These are they that lose their lives for Christ's and his gospel's sake; and to whom Christ promises eternal remuneration in his heavenly kingdom.

The doctrine of holiness has lost its charm because the spirit of holiness has lost its place. While many professors of religion cleanse themselves from what constitutes the filthiness of the flesh, they are dallying in their affections and indulgences among the many scenes of the filthiness of the spirit. This is true of all who cater to the spirit of the world in social frivolities and fashionable vanities; all men that trade under the maxims of a worldly policy; all women that adorn themselves in conformity to worldly fashions. In not one of them does exist, or can exist, a single emotion of the spirit of holiness. No one saw, or ever will see, one of these worldly-minded church members at a meeting called for holiness. Their absence is not an act of contempt, but from a want of interest.

The object of their living is not the perfecting of holiness in the fear of God. This being true, enough is said. There is no religion that can save below the measure of it that is intensely concerned in perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Holiness is moral cleanness; it is spiritual purity.—Its rejoicing is that there is a fountain opened in the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness. What a thought! Carnal professors barely desire salvation from sin, and that merely to keep out of hell; but holy believers pant and pray to be saved from all its effects, its uncleanness. This is the idea. It has defiled me, it has made me unlike God. I can no more endure the idea of its uncleanness than I can of itself. Show me a person that is contented with either spot or wrinkle on religious vesture, especially one from which he or she could cleanse themselves by the rule prescribed in the text, by perfecting holiness in the fear of God, and I will show you one that has a name that he liveth while he is actually dead.

In your meetings for holiness, let a humble correspondent urge on you all as leaders, to keep your people up to this point, that there is no proof of personal holiness in any one, only as any one is experimentally perfecting that holiness in the fear of God, and can say, "I know I am holy because my disrelish to all sin, to sin in all forms, grows deeper and stronger, just as I perfect holiness through holy efforts after the good."—Christian Standard.

And now, friends of the poor African, I want to tell you that our school-house is finished and paid for. It is a humble building, but will doubtless serve for the little time needed as well as a costly one. A large stove and plenty of wood keeps it warm, and we enjoy it. It stands on the summit of a hill, with a beautiful ravine on each side, coursed by rivulets fed by springs. At the foot of the hill the streams meet, and in wet weather it goes dancing merrily along. The ascent on one side is made up of a gradual rocky slope of nearly one hundred feet. On the other side the house is reached from the Louisville and Nashville Pike by a nearly level path, through a grove which contains three acres; and on this side of the hill stands a "Missionary Baptist Church," so called, but no mission work for the poor African, except a seat near the door once a month. The spot is delightfully romantic, and so quiet as to be favorable for the growth of intellect and the love of nature.

We dedicated our house to the one service, to be used for school and worship. The house was crowded, and I gave them the history and origin of dedications, and dwelt especially upon personal dedications. I, nor but few white persons, can move their emotional natures as can their own preachers, yet they listened with a struggling intelligence beaming in their faces, as I tried in my humble way to simplify truth to meet their comprehension. Then they talked, and sang, and prayed, and got quite happy, but had to bring up their old comparison between Moses and their teacher. But I told them, as I always do, of their far-off friends, and of the God who, through them, sent and sustained the teacher. Then they voted thanks for their house, arranged for their meetings, and separated, all seeming to feel that they had had a good time.

The next day I opened school. Some are yet shoeless and poorly clad, and the barrels that have been started will be a God-send indeed. Seven of the older ones, living at a distance, I take into my family. They are comfortably clad, but cannot raise money to pay board. But as I always encourage them to help themselves to the utmost, and think it best, I said they must bring sixty-five cts. per week, and we would put all together, and make it go as far as possible, and trust God for the rest.

I raised nearly potatoes enough to do us, planting and hoeing them with my own hands. Sisters, such out-door exercise has made me a healthy woman, of threescore years that I am; and when not teaching, I take all the out-door exercise I can, not neglecting the in-door either, and have found it medicine. The garden and flower beds give strength and elevation of mind also.

Our kitchen is as a bee-hive. We rise at five, and at eight start up the hill, with our lunch for dinner. After supper have study, reading, singing and prayer till nine, when all must be still; and in my quiet room I can then think awhile alone.

I have written these particulars, thinking they might interest our young friends who read the Crisis. Some may think this is small work, and it is, compared with that of many; but life is made up of little things and duties, and let us all, young and old, try in each station, as much as possible, to brighten the weary journey of life. O that all of earth's millions were wise, so that in the bright eternal day, which will soon dawn, they might find the glorious rest and inheritance so beautiful to contemplate!

An old friend, not of our order, has sent me $100 to relieve the sick and the aged, saying, Use a little of it for your own comfort; and my own son remembers "mother," so that I lack for no real necessity. All I need is to help feed as many as I can of those who could not otherwise be taught. From past experience I feel that I may trust the matter with Him whose is the gold and the silver; and I would have every mind directed by his Spirit. I have often felt like leaving, and as often felt restrained and the way hedged. I would be led, as a little child by the hand of its parent. I find it sweet to trust in God for the greater, and the lesser good also.

To the struggling, weary ones let me say, Lean hard upon the arm that is mighty to save, while you press on in the path of duty. And to the young, Resist the world, the flesh, and the devil, and you may scatter smiles every step you take. Every writer in our loved paper has brightened my pathway, and I hope to greet you all in the glad hereafter.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. Shriner.

Dear. Brn.:—Once more I ask the privilege of occupying a little space in our much loved Crisis. It is so refreshing to read the communications from the brethren and sisters of like precious faith, that I want to cast in my mite with them.

Week by week and day by day as I compare what is written in the word of God, concerning the last days and the condition the world is to be in when the Son of man shall come, with what is now transpiring in the earth, the state of the nations, the condition of society, the coldness and formality and the great desire for outward show that exist almost universally in the professed christian churches, I realize more and more deeply that the end is close at hand. As one writer has very aptly expressed it, We are like a train of cars that has passed every station marked on the route, and are now waiting to hear the shout of the conductor announcing our arrival at our journey's end. And the question comes with startling force, Are we ready? Are our garments pure, unspotted from the world, so that we shall not be ashamed to stand in the presence of the King.

If we were on a journey, and knew that when we left the train, we should be ushered immediately into the presence of the Queen of England, or the Emperor of Russia, we should want to be sure that our dress was all in order. We could not appear before them in soiled garments, but would want every thing about us as near perfection as we could possibly make it. How much more important is it that we be ready to meet the King of the whole earth.

When the apostle John looked forward in vision to the closing up of all things, he heard a voice saying, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready; and to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." Not the righteousness of good works, for "all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags;" and when we have done all that is in our power, we can only say, "We are unprofitable servants; we have done that which was our duty to do." But we want to be clothed with the righteousness which is by faith in Christ and his atoning blood; a faith which works by love, leading to a pure and holy life, giving no occasion for reproach, avoiding every appearance of evil.

It does seem to me that the most grand and glorious tidings ever proclaimed in the ears of mortal man, is that now being heralded throughout the length and breadth of the land that "Jesus is coming again." Not as he came before—a sacrifice for the sins of the people, but coming in glory to reign over the whole earth, and restore it to its Edenic beauty. Nothing unholy or impure will then be permitted to exist. Our ears will no longer be shocked as they now are, by hearing continually of the terrible crimes that are being committed, and the awful calamities that are being visited upon all portions of the earth.

But while I rejoice in the prospect that opens up before the watching and waiting ones, who are keeping their garments pure, my heart goes out in earnest desire that others may see the necessity of preparing to meet the Lord. O, I feel as though I wanted to urge every watchman on the walls, to sound the cry louder, Jesus is coming! It is no time now to be resting and taking our ease. The King's business requires haste. There is not a moment to lose, for for we know not how soon the gathering storm will burst, and the opening heavens reveal the Son of God in all his glory. May God help us to be faithful in that which is committed to us, that we may hear the "Well done."

From M. L. Moulton.

My dear christian brethren and sisters:—I am still striving to be an overcomer, and do the will of my dear heavenly Father. Although there are many trials and temptations surrounding us in the days in which we are living, but our blessed Father has said his grace is sufficient for us, if we will but trust in him. How true it is that we are living in a grand and awful time. There are many things which tend to draw our minds away from the leading star, Christ Jesus; but I mean, by the grace of God assisting me, to be saved in the blessed kingdom, where sickness, sorrow and death will never come.

Oh, I look with a bright anticipation to that glorious day, when our Life-giver will come to give his people eternal life, and raise the dear sleeping saints. How many loved ones we have laid away in the cold, dark earth. When I think death must be our eternal sleep with them, unless Jesus comes again and gives them life, I can say with all my heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." I am glad Jesus said when he went away that he would come again and give his weary pilgrims a home beyond this vale of tears. How blessed! My hope is all in the soon coming of my blessed Redeemer, and the resurrection of the dear sleeping ones. I mean, by the help of God, to be among that happy number who will hear the "Well done" said unto them; who will hear Jesus say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

I realize in a measure how good and humble we must be to be saved in the kingdom when Jesus comes. We must be separate from the follies of this vain world; we must be freed from pride and all that hinders a free course of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. Many will pray to God to humble them. Dear reader, let us humble ourselves. We read in the word, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." I had rather humble myself than have God humble me. It is my prayer that each one who is looking for Jesus may live humble, watchful, and prayerful lives, standing free in Christ, ready to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb when Jesus comes.

I often read and meditate upon the promises God has left upon record for us, and think, Can it be possible that we have got such a God to worship, one that knows all things, even the very inmost thoughts of our hearts? Can it be possible his promises are true? Can it be that whosoever will may come? Can it be that the vilest of sinners can come and obtain this great salvation if they will? If they will come, he hath said he will in no wise cast them out. I know God's promises are sure. I know when I had a will to come to Jesus, my Savior accepted me, and saved me from sin, and I expect, if faithful when he comes, to be saved with an eternal salvation. All glory be to God's blessed name forever! I am a sinner saved by grace through faith; it is not of myself; it is the gift of God. I love Jesus because he first loved me. I love to think of his coming, because he will give me a home with him, and not me only, but all that love his appearing.

Let us be faithful. Just a little from this time, and we will have a home in the kingdom. Jesus will surely come; he will not tarry.

From Bro. J. R. Harley.

Dear Editors of the World's Crisis:—It is for some time that I have been a reader of the Crisis, and have perused very many interesting articles. Amongst others, I read in No. 25, a piece headed, "Be ye all ready," which was very interesting to me. I think every christian ought to read it carefully, and ponder well over it. The question is very important. Without any doubt, the world is winding up its history. The second advent of our Lord is near at hand. Let us pause for a moment, each and every one, and ask the question, Am I ready? I heard some one say, "How can I get ready. I feel so and so." The question is not how you feel, but simply are you ready? Paul said to his Corinthian brethren, "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" This he said to those who had made the solemn vow to renounce the world and follow Jesus. In short, the whole plan of salvation is conditional, and no one is really ready except he knows of a day or time in which he has made a full surrender to the Lord and Savior, and has become obedient to the whole plan of salvation. There is not only a sin of commission, but also a sin of omission. To him that knoweth to do good, and does it not, to him it is certainly a sin of omission already.

Now, my christian friends, what better can we do than to render obedience to every command of the Lord? By so doing we will be purified and sanctified. Then and only then we are of those that love his appearing. The sinner with his guilty conscience will not love his appearance, but call on the rocks and mountains to hide him from the presence of him that comes to execute judgment on a guilty world. With true christians it will not be so, but the opposite. They have made it their chief delight to love and praise him while here on earth, and they will rejoice when they see their Master coming to call his jewels home from a world of sin and sorrow to the New Jerusalem where all is happiness, where there is nothing but singing and praising God and the Lamb through all the ages of eternity.

O let us all be up and doing while there is time and opportunity, and not forget to ask ourselves, Am I ready?

Harleysville, Montgomery Co., Pa.

From Bro. Arthur A. Waite.

When I started to serve God anew, I wrote a confession to our Advent papers, acknowledging that I had been living in a backslidden state. I then wrote to many individuals for the same purpose. My first work at the Springfield campmeeting was to seek out and confess to those whom I knew had suffered by the course I had taken, and to ask forgiveness for every thing I had done wrong when a backslider. The past year I have labored every Sunday, and nearly each evening during the week, which efforts the Lord has condescended to bless. I meet with those who, not having seen my confession, ask whether I have publicly confessed and started right. I have, and do so again knowing, "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." I not only want to be saved, but I feel that I must be saved. I do thank the brethren for their confidence and the many openings which they have made for me.

The past year has been to us well, and my wife joins in saying it has been the happiest days of our life. "Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O Lord, according unto thy word." The work of an evangelist to me is blessed, but I do fear that it will be curtailed, as my wife's debilitated condition requires my presence at home. Do pray for me, that I may be found "giving meat in due season" when the Master comes.

ARE YOU TIRED?

Reader, I believe that there are many persons who are weary and tired of every thing in this life, and yet have nothing to cheer them on in looking forward to the life to come. Are you one?

I believe that there are many who are thoroughly unhappy in their own hearts, although they will not confess it—unhappy because they know they are not living as God would have them—unhappy because they know they are not fit to die. Are you one?

There is rest for the weary even in this world, if they will seek it. There is repose for the tired and heavy-laden, if they will apply for it in the right quarter. There is real, solid, lasting happiness to be had on this side of the grave if people will inquire for it where it is to be found.

Where is this rest? Where is this repose? Where is this happiness? It is to be found in Christ. It is given by him to all children of mankind who will confess their need, and humbly ask him to relieve them. It is enjoyed by all who hear Christ's voice and follow him. It is the privilege of all who believe on Jesus. "Come unto me," he says, "all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." "We which have believed," says his servant Paul, "do enter into rest." Matt. 11:28; Heb. 4:3.

Reader, I invite you this day in my Master's name to come to Christ and be his disciple, if you want to be happy. Cease to seek happiness in the vain things of this world. Give up the pride, the self-will, the sinful stubbornness of your own ways. Come to Jesus as a humble sinner, and cast your soul on him, and then the rest I have spoken of shall be your own.—J. C. Ryle.

MACHINE PREACHING.

There is such a thing. A preacher may grow into a kind of automaton. His work may come to be perfunctory—his preaching mechanical. And such the preacher will become, and such will his preaching become, if he does not keep alive within his own soul the fires of devotion. It is a sad and bitter thing when gospel preachers become automatized, and their ministrations decline into mere performance, and freeze into a rigid, ritualistic routine.

Mr. Spurgeon notices machine preaching after this style: "Abhor, dear brethren, the thought of being clock-work ministers, who are not alive by abiding grace within, but are wound up by temporary influences; men who are only ministers for the time being, under the stress of the hour of ministering, but cease to be ministers when they descend the pulplt stairs. True ministers are always ministers. Too many preachers are like those sand-toys we buy for our children; you turn the box upside down, and the little acrobat revolves and revolves till the sand is all run out, and then he hangs motionless; so there are some who persevere in the ministrations of truth as long as there is an official necessity for their work, but after that, no pay, no paternoster; no salary, no sermon.—Banner of Holiness.

UNDER THE LEAVES.

Under the leaves the north wind heaps
In gorgeous piles together,
Our little ones in silence sleep
This cold autumnal weather.

Under the leaves that rustle by,
By wind and rain drop hurried,
How many loved ones faded lie,
How many hopes are buried.

Under the leaves, yellow and red,
Of late so widely scattered,
How many dreams we formed lie dead,
How many joys are scattered.

Under the leaves. Yet blest are they
Thus freed from earthly sorrow,
Who wake to find eternal day,
And know no sad to-morrow.

ETERNAL LIFE.

A. DINSMORE.

Who will have it? It is just before us. Now is the time to "make our calling and election sure." Who has got the seal of the Spirit? Paul says—"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

Life and death are set before us; which will we choose? The choice is with us. It has all been paid for, and is freely offered to all. "He that will come may come, and take of the waters of life freely." But Jesus says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." If we would have eternal life we must cut loose from this world and its charms. We must "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and . . . . run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith."

Eternal life! do we realize what it cost to purchase it for us? Do we realize that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," that we through his sufferings and death might have eternal life? He suffered the reproach of men, wandered up and down the earth, not having where to lay his head, was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin, died upon the cross for his enemies, saying at the last, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He died, the just for the unjust; for we have all sinned and come short of the glory of God, but through believing on Him whom he hath sent, we can have eternal life.

"Let us take unto ourselves the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

East Bowdoinham, Me.

STICK TO THE FOUNDATION.

Our lot is fallen in times when, on the one hand, the very foundations of the faith are shaken by those who ought to be its chief defenders; and on the other a superstructure of wood, hay, and stubble is raised upon that foundation, almost equally perilous to the safety of those who trust themselves upon it. And men are asking, where is there any resting-place amidst this deluge of unbelief and false doctrine with which the whole earth is overspread? But why such a question? Is not the ark of God's word floating high above it, offering a secure, a permanent resting-place to every weary and heavy-laden soul that seeks a refuge in it? Is not the ark of God's testimony spread before you?

Keep close to God's own word. Let no man call himself what he will, move you from the foundation. And amidst all the varied interpretations of the word, keep to that which a prayerful, earnest, and diligent perusal of it carries home to your conscience. When you stand before the bar of God hereafter, no dependence upon human teaching will be your vindication for not having acted upon God's word as he gave it to you. He who allows any man to come between him and God's message to him, must take the consequence of preferring man's word to God's.—Dean Goode.

ARE YOU COVETOUS?—Do you feel the world entangle you? You may struggle against this evil as long as you please, but if it be your besetting sin, you will never be delivered from it any other way but by the blood of Jesus. Take it to Christ. Tell him, "Lord, I have trusted thee, and thy name is Jesus, for thou dost save thy people from their sins. Lord, this is one of my sins; save me from it." Ordinances are nothing without Christ; as a means of mortification, your prayers, your repentances, and your tears—the whole of them together—are worth nothing apart from him.

LIGHT.

J. W. BURROUGHS.

Cannot some of our prophetic expositors give us more light on the coming of our blessed Savior? something more definite? I fear that there is a tendency among us as a people to get drowsy. We have some of us waited long, and the tendency is to rest or sleep. Let us wake up to the great theme of the soon coming of our blessed Lord.

There is no mistake, brethren, but what we are right, in the main, as to the soon coming of Jesus. And there is nothing else that will arouse the church to active duty. It is the "present truth," and nothing else will do. There are other kindred truths, such as righteousness, holiness, purity of heart, a breaking off from all bad habits, and cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh, living humble, devoted christians, and yet we need and must have light on the speedy coming of Jesus. That is the key-note that thrills our very souls. There is nothing like it to cheer up the poor way-worn pilgrim. We want to get home, blessed be God! Cannot some of the leading ones see a "light in the window" at home—an unmistakable light? That is what we want.

My prayer is, O God, give us more light on the coming of our blessed Savior! I want to see him, glory to his name! Nothing else will satisfy us. O Lord, give us the welcome token!

HOME AND HEALTH.

DUTY TO PARENTS.

THOMAS FOOTE.

The course and compass of God's providence, and his methods of establishing the measures of reciprocal duty, are no where more remarkable than in the mutual obligations between parents and their children. The child comes into the world naked and helpless, and more destitute of the natural means of security and support than almost any of the inferior creatures.

In this exigency the parental tenderness steps in to his relief, supplies all his necessities, and relieves all his wants; bears with all his untowardly dispositions at an age when he is neither capable of being corrected nor convinced; bears with all degrees of his folly and impertinence; listens to all his trifling and idle inquiries, not only with patience, but with pleasure, till they gradually conduct him to health, strength and knowledge.

But the child is not long arrived at this perfection of his nature before his parents begin to fall gradually into the same infirmities through which they lately conducted and supported their child, and need the same assistance which they lately gave to him. First, they begin to grow sickly, and then they call for the aid of that strength which they cultivated in their children. The loss of cheerfulness and good humor commonly succeeds the loss of health. The aged parents are uneasy, and perhaps fretful, and now is the time for children to return all that tenderness and patience to their parents without sauciness or reproof, which their parents bestowed upon them in all their childish perverseness at an age when they were not capable of being corrected.

In the next place, the aged parents grow very talkative, and, as youth is too apt to think, impertinent, and dwell continually upon the observations and adventures of their earlier years. Remember you also had your time of being talkative and impertinent, and your parents have it all; yet there is this difference, you asked them silly and trifling questions, while they make to you wise and useful observations. "But they are troublesome because they tell them so often." The answer to this is very obvious. If your parents bore with your folly, you may well bear with their wisdom; and although, perhaps they may talk more than is necessary to inform you of present things, yet their conversation turns mostly on things, perhaps, that took place before you came into the world, and, consequently, such as they must know much better than you. Or, though they should talk more than is necessary to inform you, they do not talk more than is necessary to inform your children who are now come to an age of asking questions; and therefore Providece hath well appointed that their grandfathers and grandmothers should now be in a humor to answer them all, and to supply them with a store of useful observations which they need to have repeated again and again. So that this humor of talkativeness which is commonly thought to be so troublesome in old people, hath its use, and is surely appointed of God.

But, if it were not, the children in bearing with it, do but barely return to their parents what they long since owed them. In the next place, the strength of the parents fails them, and they cannot walk without support; but you will not let them want one. The strength of their minds does not long outlive the strength of their bodies. They are once more infants, and now are confined to their beds as they were at first to their cradles. This is the last stage of life; and here they demand all that care, and tenderness, and compassion at your hands when they are just going out of the world which you called for at theirs when you first came into it.

You that have fathers and mothers dependent upon you, look at this matter, and may the Lord help us to do our duty in every respect.

Salisbury, N. H.

CHILDREN'S DRESS.

Much has been written of late on the subject of dress. "What shall we wear?" "How much may we spend in unnecessary dress?" These are questions that are agitating the minds of christian women. Some few, at least, are taking a decided stand against the artificial trappings of pride and extravagance. But would it not be well for christian mothers to begin at the root of this great evil? How can we expect our grown-up daughters to easily lay aside the fashion and follies of the day when they have been trained to it from the cradle? While our little ones are decorated in all the paraphernalia of fashion, and their little minds poisoned by a love of admiration and vain show, how can we expect to make much progress in this reformation, so much needed in the church?

How soon this over-dressing of the body strikes to the heart, and manifests itself in the actions of the child. How quickly the child copies the example set before it. If the mother daily discusses "the latest fashion," "the most becoming style," in the presence of her children, will they not naturally conclude that the highest point to be aimed at in life is to dress, and to be fashionable? Oh! what a sad sight to see christian mothers consulting the dressmaker, studying the fashion plates, and spending so much precions time fashioning garments for the little children God has given them to train up for heaven. Christian mothers, how much time do you spend studying the Scriptures and seeking after knowledge and wisdom, that you may be enabled to lead your little ones to Him who has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me?"—The Christian Woman.

TOBACCO—ITS EFFECTS ON THE BODY.

"In no one view is it possible to contemplate the creature man in a more absurd and ridiculous light than in his attachment to tobacco."—Dr. Rush.

The effects of tobacco on the body, mind, and moral sensibilities, are abundant proof to any candid mind of its injurious and poisonous nature. There are but very few diseases to which the constant use of tobacco, in varied forms, will not become a direct cause, and it becomes a help in the advancement of any disease.

Medical works abound with instances where little children have been poisoned to death by the parents' use of opium, alcohol, and tobacco; also where little children have been taken with severe vomitings from inhaling the air in a room where members of the family, or others, have been smoking. Our notice has also been called to numerous instances where little babes were accustomed to lie at night in the arms of, or next to the father (who used the weed), who grew thin, pale, sickly, and in several instances died, the cause of which, upon investigation by the attending physicians (men of learning and years of successful practice), was declared to be the inhaling of air through the night-poisoned effluvia exuding from the person of the father, which has been proven by removing the babe to the cradle by itself, its health and vigor returning, but when returned to the bed with the father for a little time showed again the symptoms of decline. Think of this, tobacco-chewing and tobacco-smoking father and mother.

The above facts prove that the poisonous elements of tobacco circulate all through the body. It may be scented in the hat, in the shirt, the drawers, the stockings, and even the boots of the man who has used it for a number of years. This being the case, it could not be otherwise than an instigator, or at least an abettor, of various diseases. In whatever part of the system there may be found an excitant, irritating or poisoning element, the organs of the body at such point or points cannot perform their legitimate functions either in building up the physical body or in carrying useless or worn out matter from it. Hence, attending all such failure of important work must be the foundation and instigating cause of disease in the various parts of the body where such failure of work occurs. How then, we ask, can the poisonous element of tobacco circulate to every portion of the body, and in the confirmed tobacco-nser be found at all times in every or nearly every tissue of his being, and yet not induce or cause disease? Such would be contrary to the fundamental laws of all animal nature. Such a thing would be opposed to all natural phenomena.—Banner of Holiness.

FRETTING.—Two gardeners had their crops of peas killed by the frost. One of them was very impatient under the loss, and fretted about it very much. The other went patiently to work at once to plant a new crop. After a while the impatient, fretting man went to visit his neighbor. To his surprise, he found another crop of peas growing finely. He asked how this could be.

"These are what I sowed while you were fretting," said his neighbor.

"But don't you ever fret?" he asked.

"Yes, I do, but I put it off till I have repaired the mischief that has been done."

"Why, then you certainly have no need to fret at all."

"True," said his friend, "and that's the reason I put it off."

BONE FELON.—The London Lancet says: "As soon as the disease is felt, put directly over the spot a fly blister, about the size of your thumb nail, and let it remain for six hours, at the expiration of which time, directly under the surface of the blister, may be seen the felon, which can instantly be taken out with the point of a needle or a lancet."

THE best preventive of hair falling and promotive of its growth, is to keep the scalp clean by frequent washing with pure soft water, occasionally adding a little borax to the water. Then keep the head as cool as possible, and the hair will not only not fall out, but will grow.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

Tune. "I am coming, Lord."—Winnowed Hymns.

LUCY M. CHAFFEE.

"And if I go away,"
Said Christ, "I'll come again,"
And to the place which I prepare,
I will receive you then."

Cho.—Thou art coming, Lord,
Signs in heaven appear;
Signs on earth thy word fulfill;
O, bring thy kingdom here!

I cannot tell the time
When Jesus will appear;
My longing heart would count the days,
But I only know 'tis near.

That judgment day of God
Is hastening on, I know;
"Behold I quickly come," said he;
"Lord Jesus, even so."

Till then, for all his grace,
O, may my answering love
And willingness to meet his will
My heart's thanksgiving prove.

To Gabriel's mystic days
O, let me "wait and come,"
Nor drop the cross until I reach
My dear Jerusalem.

BLOW THE TRUMPET IN ZION—THE DAY OF THE LORD COMETH.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

"Whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head. He heard the sound of the trumpet and took not warning. . . . But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, . . . his blood will I require at the watchman's hand." Ezek. 33 : 4-6.

It is time for the watchmen to put the great prophetic trumpet to their mouth and sound the notes of warning with no uncertain sound, for I most solemnly believe the great judgment day is nearly upon us. I have no time, nor heart, to stop to make extended apologies for failures in honest endeavor to unfold the great prophetic time measurements set forth in God's Word. I suppose that proverb, recorded by the prophet Ezekiel, must be reiterated in the land—"The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth"; but God says, "Say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision. For there shall be no more any vain vision, nor flattering divination within the house of Israel. For I am the Lord; I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged; for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord God."

Definite time is given us in the Scriptures, which are said to be profitable for "instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Events are looming up among the nations foreshadowed by the prophetic Word of a most striking and marked character. The attitude and the aspect of the great Papal hierarchy, combined with the "sick man" in Europe, about expiring with internal pangs and outside pressure, are among the last tokens of the terrible ordeal with which they must soon grapple in their death throes; for the God of heaven hath numbered their kingdoms, and the final stroke that is to cast them down to eternal oblivion is about to fall, which will come in perfect harmony with the great prophetic time calendar kept with unerring precision by Him who orders all things according to his own determinate counsel and foreknowledge, and who will not suffer those that have a knowledge of the times, as the children of Issachar, and "know what Israel ought to do," to vary much from the true point of the ending of the prophetic periods that reach to the resurrection of the just, and the justification of the holy mountain of Jerusalem. Next spring is the time fixed upon by our secular journalists for the general outbreak of war and desolation in Europe.

Says the Boston Evening Traveler of Nov. 6th:—"Austria, it is now stated, has been entrusted by the great powers to settle Turkish business; and as it is supposed that the Turks will be unable to suppress the insurrection next spring, Austria will intervene; but on which side will she fight? To act against the Christians would be to make her odious throughout Christendom, and we can scarcely believe it possible that she will be found ready to undertake so detestable an anti-crusade. Probably there will be a great war into which considerations of politics and territory, religion and race, will enter, and so render it bitter, blasting, and bloody." Again it says—"The Russian Minister is beginning to threaten Turkey because of her persecutions of the Christians, which is another hit at the peace at any-price men." As St. Paul says, "For when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape." Again, after speaking of the grand project of Russia from the days of Catherine to restore the double-headed black eagle to Byzantum, it says that the London Times is opposed to the meeting of a Conference to consider Turkish affairs, which it supposes Russia to be thinking of; for it sees in such a proceeding an opening of the whole Eastern Question,"—and to England that would be as the sixth angel of the Apocalypse pouring out his vial of wrath upon the great river Euphrates, and "preparing the way for the kings of the East."

Viewing the present attitude and aspect of the European nations in the light of the prophecies of Daniel and John, we are certain that the beast and false prophet are about to collapse and meet the judgment of God, and then be consigned to eternal perdition. For the day of their final judgment must be near to come, and the days that intervene will quickly be numbered.

The marked and wonderful manner that God is now ordering events in connection with these two great anti-Christian systems is most gratifying, and strengthening to the faith of those who have long been looking and waiting the fulfillment of the prophetic Word, that has so clearly and distinctly given the history and described the end of the beast and false prophet. The tide has turned; the sympathy and support formerly received from the nations by the great Papal hierarchy and Mohammedan power are being withdrawn, and the public press is repeatedly giving expressions of satisfaction and joy, as one blow after another is struck to weaken those corrupt systems of darkness.

In relation to the Turks says the Traveler: "If we can trust a despatch that comes by way of Ragusa, the Turks have received a precious good licking at the hands of the Christian insurgents. Some eighteen hundred of the Mussulmans attacked a strong position held by the Christians near Lubei; and after a tough struggle they were trounced and beaten, having lost one hundred and fifty men, while the Christian loss was only twenty men. There should be one such Christian victory won every week, and as many more as possible, just to keep the war going on until next spring, when the time for great work will have arrived, and the blaze of war run over the whole of European Turkey, from the Adriatic to the Marmora, and from the river Ister to the Ægean Sea."

I want to say to the old soldiers and veterans in the great Advent proclamation, we think it time to brush up the armor, and buckle it on, and enter the ranks for one more grand onset against the powers of darkness and foes of our coming King. We are satisfied that there can be no great discrepancy in our time calculations. The 1335 years of Dan. 12th must be on the point of terminating, and the 2300 years of Dan. 8th, that reach to the justification of the holy mountain of Zion, or Jerusalem, in our judgment end a short period subsequent to the 1335 years (perhaps a year), in which the indignation of Jehovah will be poured out upon the wicked nations of the earth, after the saints are caught away from it to meet the Lord in the air. We regard the last great prophetical sign of the coming judgment to be the downfall of the Turkish Empire, denominated the "king of the north" in the closing verses of Dan. 11. The prophetic delineation of the last five verses of said chapter, correspond most accurately with the invasion and conquest of the Greek empire and the countries bordering thereon by the Turks, with a vivid sketch of their closing history and end in the land of Palestine with none to help them.

The attitude of the English nation towards Turkey is very different now than in 1853, at the time of the Crimean war. "Public sentiment has changed in the English nation," says a recent writer, "from what it was twenty years ago. . . . Every full-grown man and woman must remember the ardor displayed then; how an eager people forced a reluctant Ministry into the contest, and how that Ministry was swept away because it did not display energy corresponding with the national demand. At that time we were all Turco-maniacs. There was nothing too good to be said of the Turks; no sacrifice too great to be made for them. For instance, I remember hearing Walter Savage Landor declare that the Turks were the finest gentlemen in Europe; and for them we cheerfully paid an income tax of 16 pence in the pound. Twenty years have passed, and now there is no one except the Morning Post to say a good word for the Turk. The 'fine gentleman' is now called by the name which Czar Nicholas gave him—'The Sick Man.' He is worse than sick—he is insolvent. It is no doubt mainly for this reason that we no longer feel any regard for him. For there is a close connection between the heart and the pocket; and the man or the State who cannot pay his way, must not expect much sympathy from practical people like ourselves. And so it has come to pass that whereas in 1855 we dismissed a Cabinet which would not fight for Turkey with sufficient vigor, in 1875 we should overthrow in a week the Ministry which proposed to fight for Turkey at all."

If this is a correct representation of the change of sentiment in England, the strong supporter of the Turkish empire in their last war with Russia in 1854–6, it is truly remarkable, for it clearly sets forth the providence of God in shaping affairs among the nations, to accomplish prophetic utterances given nearly 2300 years ago—"Yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him"; i. e., none shall help the Turks in their last struggle to maintain their power and existence. Prince Mentschikoff in the spring of 1853 threatened Turkey in the name of Russia, and England and France came to the rescue. In 1875 General Ignatieff, the Russian Ambassador, now threatens the Sultan in the name of the great powers of Europe. Thus the Turks have now no friendly arm to lean upon, but are soon to be swallowed up in the awful whirlpool of wrath about to be visited upon them according to God's own prophetic Word.

O the awful scenes just before us—the whole world about to go under in its unbelief and rejection of God's great judgment message, and the nominal church sleeping under their awful responsibility, and saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming"! Blessed is that servant found, when his Lord cometh, giving the household meat in due season. Amen.

THINGS I WISH TO KNOW.

L. BOUTELL.

Dearly beloved, you are aware that it is easier to ask questions than to answer them. And it may be, the right answer to the first of these questions may supersede the necessity of looking up an answer to the other seventeen. Now, while there may be obscurity in the symbolic representations of the 20th chapter of Revelation, still some things are plain historically, as well as chronologically.

The first question is, How can the thousand years of the 20th of Revelation be in the past?

How can it be anywhere else but in the past? In the first verse it is said that there is an angel who comes down from heaven "having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years; and cast him into the bottomless pit and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled." Now thus far have we symbols? and if so, are they to symbolize the same things all the way through the book of Revelation? Then angel, heaven, key, chain, dragon, serpent, devil and Satan, are all symbols, and whenever and wherever used in Revelation they are symbols whether we know where to apply them or not. "And he laid hold on the dragon." What dragon? Was it the one brought to notice in the 12th chapter, 3d verse, having seven heads and ten horns? And was it not the same dragon that fought with Michael and prevail-not? the same great dragon that was cast out into the earth? the same that stood before the woman to devour the child?" Was not this the serpent "called the devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world?" Then that was the dragon, "that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan;" which the angel laid hold on and cast into the bottomless pit. He was cast out into the earth.

Here is the downfall of paganism, that old pagan dragon, devil, and Satan. Here they all go into the bottomless pit. Pagan Romam rule is out of sight in the bottomless pit. What government is next seen bearing rule? Papal Rome. Paganism has gone down, and papacy, the leopard beast, comes up. Where does he come from? He comes out of the earth, the bottomless pit, just where that beast came from, that made war upon the witnesses and overcame them and killed them.

Now, having said thus much on the three first verses showing the fulfillment of the symbols in the overthrow of the pagan government, I ask what government may we next look for historically? Papal. None other could be seen, for none other existed. Now comes the leopard beast, with a description of his rule, and the dragon, devil, and Satan, gives him (the papal beast), "his power, his seat, and great authority."

Now we come to the fourth verse. "And I saw thrones." What thrones? Papal. And they sat upon them. Who sat upon them? The kings under the papal reign; "and power was given them"—the kings—to do what? To persecute and destroy the saints. "And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High." (Dan. 7: 25.) Now we have his identity, and the work he is to do, and if he and his wicked work is brought to view in the fourth verse, then we know where we are by his bloody track.

What does John see after the establishment of thrones—after they had gotten the power and judgment into their hands? "I saw the souls (persons) of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and the word of God." Here is brought to notice the papal persecutions with their horrors This is the martyr age. And who can doubt or deny it? Now we come to the question, and have answered it, we think, for so sure as the papal persecution is brought to view in the fourth verse, so surely it is in the past.

P. S. I would suggest concerning the other devil not brought to view in the 20th of Revelation, that there is not one intimation of his being bound before or at the Lord's coming, anywhere in the Old or New Testaments, but he is to be resisted till Christ through death might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. So the destruction of this devil is when Jesus comes to destroy death. This devil cannot live any time after death is destroyed. More on the next verse if the Lord wills. Yours in love for Bible truth.

Chelsea, Mass. —A. C. Times.

If there is a spark of fire left in a brand, run with it against the wind, and you will have a flame. So, if there is any slumbering grace in your soul, take your stand against fashionable vice and folly, in yourself, in your family, in your church, and you will soon feel "that flame of living fire which shone so bright in saints of old." Lie down in quiet, and the fire divine will utterly go out.

LOVE.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Love one another."—John 13 : 34.

Reason teaches that men should love one another. All have a common origin. There are many distinctions, it is true among men,—distinctions of nation, of complexion, of education, of circumstances, of position, of age, of size, of wealth and of disposition; yet all have a common origin. All are of the dust, and all return to dust again. Surely men should consider that all are on a level in this respect at least. All are in a world of sin and temptation, all are exposed to trials, disappointments, and sorrows.

Why should one man feel himself so much superior to another? God hath made of one blood all nations that dwell upon the earth. Life is the great boon which God has given to all. The poor laboring man has this, and the king on his throne has no more. Men are mortal, erring creatures, and they should have compassion one of another. They should not hate, despise, and try to injure each other; but be pitiful, kind, obliging, gentle, patient, courteous, polite, tender-hearted, forgiving, and submitting one to another.

But evil rules in the heart; it takes a mighty power to remove it. All by nature possess evil hearts, and are under the control of unholy principles. The reason why Cain killed Abel was because sin had entered into him, and the reason why men bite and devour each other to-day is because the evil spirit is in them.

The Lord made man upright, but he sold himself to the tempter, and hence the world is filled with contending forces—man fighting against man; and the devil has so deceived men, that even ministers will preach that men should kill each other. Men are capable of serving a better master than the devil, but their nature is so perverted, that the majority seem to prefer the service of Satan to anything better.

How clearly the apostle James understood this subject. He said: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence even of your lusts, that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not; ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain; ye fight and war, and yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God. Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" James 4 : 1–5.

This is a picture of the natural heart. How can men love each other with such a spirit as this in them? Help is needed. Where is it coming from? Who can come to our rescue, and put within us a clean heart? Who can help us to overcome the devil? Thank the Lord, there is "One mighty to save"! Now for the next few passages: "But he giveth more grace. Wherefore he saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded." James 4 : 6–8.

If you are not free from the "evil one," follow this advice: Seek the Lord with all your powers, renouncing evil in every form, submitting yourself to Jesus, and drawing near to the throne of grace with a true heart, and in full assurance of faith. Do this, and you will know what full salvation means. Let the Holy Spirit have full control of your entire being, and there will be no room for evil within you. Love one another. How natural it is then. Grace can do great things. O for more grace, grace to love one another with pure hearts fervently.

THE SABBATH.

J. P. MARQUAND.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2: 27.

Man was created on the sixth day, in the image of God. The institution of the Sabbath was on the next day, the seventh, and was for his benefit and comfort. This institution was merely appointed to subserve a purpose. It was an auxiliary or help to elevate and refine man. Next to God and angels, man is the most wonderful being in the universe. Everything on the earth must bow and do reverence to him; all creeds, institutions, Bibles, meetings, societies, forms, ceremonies, sacraments; all sciences, arts, knowledge, wisdom, truth and virtue,—all are secondary, and subservient to the use of man. It was for man that God created this beautiful world, radiant with the sun, moon and stars; its trees, mountains, valleys, rivers, brooks, flowers, birds and vegetation; and although the earth has been peopled by a sinful race of beings subject to death as their rightful penalty, it will ere long be peopled by a loyal, holy race of immortal beings coming up in the resurrection to die no more. Then may we expect an eternal Sabbath of rest and peace.

But previous to this blessed Sabbath, or rest, there is to be a dark day for the ungodly and the wicked. The world is to be purified by fire and made over anew. Every thing that is unclean and noxious is to be burnt up and destroyed, and all impenitent men and women will be consumed from off the earth. God has decreed that there shall be a clean earth and a clean people, and no unrighteousness shall remain to pollute or corrupt.

O, dear christian, is this not good news, that God will make an end of sin, and bring in a kingdom of purity and love, a Sabbath that shall never end? Let us, therefore, be diligent in business, sowing the good seed, be instant in and out of season, rebuke, exhort and teach, with all long-suffering and patience, for we know not which shall prosper, whether this or that. A few more rolling suns or months, and when the last servant is sealed with the Holy Ghost, then God will rise up to put his hand to the regeneration of the earth, and he will cut it short in righteousness, for a short work will the Lord have on the earth. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they gave in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all." They will cry, "Peace and safety, when sudden destruction will come upon them, and they shall not escape."

O sinner! unless you repent of your sins, and forsake them, you can never enter the gates of the New Jerusalem, nor be with Christ and his people. The time is short, make no delay before it is too late and the door of mercy is closed against you. Then a great ransom cannot deliver you, and your final destiny will be fixed for ever.

A THOUSAND YEARS OF CHRIST'S REIGN.

T. S. SCOVILLE.

The Shakers think that in Ann Lee is fulfilled the second advent of Christ, and that the millennium is now here. Some others think the millennium is now on the earth, and the reign of Christ now going on—a spiritual one. If people who so believe could only realize how far below the standard of God's Word is their idea of a millennium, they would be ashamed of it. Let any christian who believes in the glorious resurrection, the reign of Christ, and the wonderful, beautiful light that will surround the entire world at that time, and see the change in man, in animals, in vegetation, and, in short, in the entire constitution of every thing in this world, and he will ask to be excused from believing in such a millennium as we now have, and from a residence here amid so many tears, sorrows, disappointments and troubles as he finds about him.

It must be a singular millennium that men pray to get away from, and in the midst of which so many commit suicide to clear themselves from its felicities; where fights and street broils are the order; where drunken riot and lewd conversation are everywhere present; where men, in high and low places, cheat, rob, steal, take advantage, and cut throats. Every christian should pray, "How long, O Lord, how long?" When will the real kingdom come? when will Jesus come? When will purity, truth, love and holiness pervade every heart?

We say, O Lord, send us a better millennium than this, for we have no desire to live out a thousand years of such misery as is here given to men; indeed, the sooner we can leave this present millennium, the better for us. But we hope for another, and we are waiting for it; we earnestly desire it; yea, we long and sigh for it. We want to see Jesus; we want the new kingdom; we want the glories there to be; we want our natures changed. Besides, we want nature changed to suit our needs in the new home on this earth; we want the world so bright as to be freed from evil, and, if need be, from all who persist in evil. Any one may enjoy this millennium who desires it. When Christ comes we will cast the world and all there is in it behind us, and go to be with Christ, new creatures. Glorious hope! We are waiting and watching, for it will soon be here.

THE THEOLOGY OF THE DAY.

So numerous, so varied, and, in many respects, so antagonistic are the beliefs of the Christian world, that if they were necessary, it would seem that the revelation of the Most High was intentionally mystified, and to such an extent that the human mind by no possibility could solve it. I do not so regard it. Admitting that the Bible contains a divine revelation to man, and is intended to guide his feet into the way of life, the marked, and, in many respects, fatal diversity of opinion that prevails as to its teachings, must be the result, not of divine purpose, but of human prejudice and misconstruction.

Erudite theologians will doubtless deem me arrogant in declaring that there appeared to be fundamental errors in their systems, which have naturally and inevitably produced their discordant creeds, and which have done more to obstruct the progress of vital, scriptural Christianity, than what is termed the "natural hostility of the human heart." For example, contemplate for a moment an earnest enquirer after truth in the perusal of the several Sabbath discourses as reported in the Monday morning's edition of the leading journals! What does he find in them but declarations of belief as varied as the preachers, contradictions the most dogmatic and irreconcilable? From this he naturally determines that all he reads cannot be scriptural; that of the teachers of the Word, some, at least, must need enlightenment; that to believe all, is to believe nothing; and he feels himself as far as ever from the truth, his ignorance unenlightened, and his doubts unremoved. Nay, worse, he reasons that if these, the accepted students and teachers of theology, in their interpretations of Scripture, are so diametrically opposed to one another, his indecision must be excusable.

If this be so at home, how much more pernicious must such diversity of opinion and teaching be in heathen communities where the missionary of the cross seeks to christianize the idolatrous inhabitants? Rarely is any field surrendered to one sect—the Roman church, ordinarily, pioneers, the Calvinist and the Arminian soon follow, each endeavoring to make the peculiar doctrines of their sect prominent, each zealous for their faith, and the poor heathen is "in bewildering mazes lost," looking for one faith, but finds many, and knowing not which to accept, he retains his idols.

It is claimed that this diversity of opinion, as it is called, was "providentially and wisely predetermined," but the warrant for such an assertion is yet to be produced. The prayer of the great founder of Christianity was, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

The plan of salvation was devised by an unerring Mind, was revealed by an infinitely wise Being, who knew best how to suit his communications to the intelligence of his creatures. He "knew what was in man." His design was not to mystify, but to enlighten. In proof of this he vouchsafes the aid of the Holy Spirit, saying, "He shall teach you all things," and the promise, universal, is that "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God."

The union among christians that has of late been so much urged and coveted is desirable, but it is at best only a religious fraternization. That which the world needs is a unity of faith. This, it will be urged, is impracticable. I do not deem it so. Diversity of government there will be in church societies, diversity in fundamental beliefs there need not be. It is neither decreed nor necessitated. "Remove the cause and the effect will cease." I think the causes are discoverable, and with your permission, shall hereafter state what I deem them to be. Berean.

FIERY TRIALS.

CATHERINE DAGGETT.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." The time has come for the church to be purified and made white, and tried. The trying time has come. None will enter the kingdom without being well tried and proved. In the past, God's people have had to go through trial before they were honored, and so his people now will have to go through a similar process before they are honored with eternal life, glory, and immortality. The Lord tried Abraham when he required the offering up of his Son, and finding him faithful, he honored him with the promise of the new earth. He tried Job by taking away all that he had, and even his health, but after he had well tried him, and found him true, he gave him back all, and honored him by calling him righteous. Daniel was well tried before he was so highly honored. His trial was with the lions. He had chosen to stay a while with them than to worship or pray to any other God but the God of heaven. After he was found true, he was exalted by God and man. So also with the three Hebrew worthies. They preferred to be cast into the fiery furnace than worship any other one but the true God, and honored the God of heaven in their trial, and the Lord honored them with his presence. Peter was tried with a home in a jail, and was delivered in answer to prayer. So were Paul and Silas put in prison, and well tried, and found worthy of honor and eternal life, and they will have it soon when the great Life-giver comes.

None will be exempt from trials who are going to be saved. The trials will come from every direction. The worst ones that Paul found were from false brethren. These trials must come to shake people off from every thing but the Lord, and to wean us from this poor, doomed world that is so soon to be destroyed. The Lord says if we love earthly friends better than we love him, we are not worthy of him; therefore every one's love will be tried thoroughly, and proved whether the Lord is desired more than friends, or homes, or the world, as in the last day, God alone will be exalted. Our faith will be thoroughly tried to see if it is true, if in God or man. If in man, it will fall; if in God, it will stand, and abide the day of his appearing. So think it not strange concerning the fiery trials. There is a need for them; we must have them, for the Lord says he scourgeth every one that he receiveth. Therefore make up your mind to take joyfully whatever trials come, knowing that the promise is true, that "all things work together for good to them that love God," and that "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

Trials are good, for without them we should not know whether we were wheat or tares. There is no pure gold until it has been purged of all its dross, but then it comes out lighter than ever. So with God's people; they shine all the brighter after he has well tried and proved them in the furnace of affliction.

Dear tried ones, be of good cheer. The trying time is almost over. Soon Jesus will come with the crown and glorious reward, eternal life and honor bestowing upon us, a home in the kingdom where no sorrow or trials can ever come. Only a little longer ye will have to endure the trials of this life. This is the self-denying time, and by-and-by we will have a welcome to a glorious and heavenly place where we can rest from all temptation. It is cheap enough to exchange a world like this, for one so soon to come, that is full of happiness and bliss. The Lord help us all to be there, is the prayer of the writer.

Bangor, Me.

— The hottest furnace makes the finest gold; the brightest lightning comes from the blackest cloud; the purest faith from the severest trials.

THE ARIAN KINGDOM.

WM. HOBBS.

The Visigoths, the Vandals, and the Ostrogoths, were Arians, and were conquered in the interest of the Catholic creed, in order to establish that creed as the religion of the Roman empire, both of the East and West; and hence their conquest forms an important epoch in the history of Catholicism. Buck says: "Arians were followers of Arius, a presbyter of the church of Alexandria about 315, who maintained that the Son of God was totally and essentially distinct from the Father; that he was the first and noblest of those beings whom God had created, the instrument under whose subordinate operation he formed the universe. . . . Their doctrine was carried in the fifth century into Assyria, under the Vandals, and into Asia under the Goths. Italy, Gaul, and Spain, were also deeply infected with it; and towards the commencement of the sixth century it was triumphant in many parts of Asia, Africa, and Europe; but it sunk almost at once when the Vandals were driven out of Africa, and the Goths out of Italy, by the arms of Justinian."

An Index of Dates, published in London in 1859, says the "Visigoths, or Westward Goths, form a separate division about 330. . . . . Assist the revolt of Procopius, 365; Athanaris their king, 369. Pressed by the Huns, are allowed by Valens to settle on the southern side of the Danube, and joined by their countrymen, the Ostrogoths. Antharic resigns to Fritigern, 376. Settled by a treaty with Theodosius I. in Thrace; choose Alaric as their leader, 382. Plunder Thessaby, 395; march into the West and invade Italy, 400; take Rome; Adolphus succeeds Alaric, 410. Leave Italy, and establish a kingdom in the south of Gaul, 412; extend their conquests into Spain, and found the Gothic (Visigothic) kingdom in that country, 414. . . . Most of their possessions in Gaul, conquered by Clovis, 507. Their kingdom in Spain overthrown by the Saracens, 711."

"Vandals, a Gothic tribe, early assailants of the Roman empire, at first among the Marcomanni and Allemanni, conclude a separate treaty for themselves with the Emperor Aurelian, 271. Form part of the army of Radagaisus, 405. After his defeat, they are led by Gunderic to force a passage over the Rhine, and establish themselves in Gaul, 406; enter Spain, at first acknowledge Maximus, then give him up to the Romans, and establish a kingdom for themselves under Gunderic, 409. Overcome the Alani and Suevi in Spain, 419. Driven by Asterius out of Gallicia into the south of Spain, 420. Defeat Castinus, and become a formidable power, 422. Occupy the south of Spain and the Balearic islands, 426. Genseric succeeds Gunderic, and is invited into Africa by Bonifacius, 428—lands there, and founds a new kingdom, 429."

"Kings of the Vandals in Africa. Genseric, 429–477. Hunneric, 477–484. Gundamund, 484–496. Thorismund, 496–523. Hilderick, 523–531. Gelismer, 531–534. Overthrown by Belisarius, and Africa made part of the Eastern empire, 534. The Vandals no longer a distinct people."

"Ostrogoths, or Eastern Goths, form a distinct division from their Western brethren (Visigoths) about 330. Their king, Geberich, defeats the Vandals at Marosch, and drives the Silingi into Pannonia, 335. Hermanrich reunites the two nations; separates them again by resigning the command of the Visigoths to Athanarish, 369. Attacked by the Huns; force a passage for themselves, and join the Visigoths on the southern bank of the Danube, 376. . . . Are settled in Phrigia and Lydia by the emperor Theodosius I., 382. Revolt under Tribigild and ravage Phrigia, 399. Brought into Europe again by Theodosius II., and settled on the lands left by the Visigoths in Thrace, 427. Conquered by Attila, 448; after his death defeat his son Ellac, recover independence, and under their kings Walamir, Theodemir, and Widimir, occcupy Pannonia, 453; make a treaty with the emperor Leo I., to whom Theodoric, son of Theodemir, is given as a hostage, 463. Walamir leads his people to assist Anthemius, emperor of the West; is defeated and slain by Ricimer, 472. Widimir invades Italy, and joins the Visigoths in Gaul, 473. . . . They ravage Thrace, take Epidamnus, and besiege Thessalonica, but are defeated by Sabinianus, 479; the whole submit to Theodoric, son of Theodemir, 481, and under his guidance establish a kingdom of the Ostrogoths in Italy, 493. . . . . . Fall of their kingdom, 559."

Kings of Italy. Odoacer, 476–493. Theodoric, the Ostrogoth, 493–526. Athanaric, 526–534. Theodotus, 534–536. Vitiges, 536–540. Hildibold, 540–544. Tolilia, 541–552. Teias, 552–553. Italy again made a province of the Roman empire, 553."

This date—A. D. 553—forms an important date as the year of the final overthrow of the Arian kingdom of Italy, and the union of the West with the Eastern Empire, the Catholic creed thereby being fully established by the arms of Justinian. In this year the fifth general council was held at Constantinople, which confirmed the decree of Justinian against the "Three Chapters" and the Origenists, issued in 544. By the conquest of the Ostrogoths in 553, by Narses, all the decrees of Justinian against heretics became in active force, because there was no kingdom that had power to prevent the execution of those edicts; and the confirmation of his edict of 544, by the Council of Constantinople in 553, is an important event, when the Catholic creed triumphed over all opposing creeds. From that time to 1843 was a thousand two hundred and ninety years. And a few more years will complete the thousand three hundred and thirty-five years from that date. Blessed is he that waiteth, or that endureth to the end.

BRO. H. L. STEVENS, Coles' Ferry, Va., writes Nov. 25th:—"We have had some thirty-five converts here, and three at Black Walnut." Bro. Brundage and Bro. Stevens have been laboring together. May the Lord bless them richly. M. G.

DOING WELL.—The three months' list looks encouraging. Have you added any to the number? If not, now is a good time to do it, while the mind is on the subject. Come, make an effort to get the light and truth into some honest heart, that has been deprived of the privileges we are enjoying. This is only doing as we would have others do unto us in like circumstances. M. G.

THE SPEEDY COMING OF CHRIST is believed by many now, who ten years since had no special interest in the subject. The number of believers are on the increase. An English writer, who is opposed to the agitation of the subject confesses that "the doctrine is held by an influential portion of our [English] ministry, and, probably, membership too, and by a majority perhaps of our most successful evangelists." It is also added that "very many" of the English missionaries are proclaiming that Christ is coming soon. Praise the Lord that the good news is spreading in all directions. M. G.

"OUR COUNTRY."—The aspect of things in in "our country" is not very promising, and we see no reason to believe it will be any better. A close observer remarks as follows:

"Every thoughtful mind is alarmed at the condition of our country. There is no leadership—no statesmanship; not a solitary unitizing idea to fix and guide public action. Confusion and antagonism reign supreme. The house is rotten in timbers and tenants. Give us one hundred men who will act in concert, and we are saved. But if a meeting is called for this purpose, you will see such a contrariety as to make unity impossible. If there are statesmen they will not come to the front, and the people will not recognize them." M. G.

TRACTS.—This is the time to circulate tracts, that they may be read during the long winter evenings. It is a very economical way of scattering the light and truth. Those who have them in their houses, lying idle, will do well to hunt them up and lend them to their neighbors, especially the poor, who are not able to buy books and papers. In this way many may be led to seek an interest in Christ, and be saved in the day of his coming. Let us do all we can for Jesus, who has done so much for us. Let those who have no tracts to lend or give away, send at once and get some. Never be without them. Then when a neighbor comes in, and is willing to read, you can let him have one to read, which will open the way for further conversation on the subject, when he makes another visit. M. G.

POPE'S TEMPORAL POWER.—In 754 A. D., Astolphus, the Lombard king of Italy, surrendered to Pepin, the French king, who gave the Pope his tempoal power by the following treaty: "The Exarchate [of Ravenna] and the Pentapolis, with all the cities, castles, territories, and lands, thereunto belonging, to be for ever held, and possessed, by the most holy Pope Stephen, and his successors in the apostolic See of St. Peter."—Bower's History of the Popes, Vol. 2, p. 97.

This marks the commencement of the temporal power of the Pope. When the Italians entered Rome, Sept. 20th, 1870, the last vestige of temporal power was taken away, after being held, most of the time, for eleven hundred and sixteen years. Thank the Lord, that the long period of persecution is in the past, and that we may now expect to soon see our glorious coming King of kings.
M. G.

"THE PACIFIC MISSION."—Under this heading we find a long report in the "Signs of the Times" Oct. 21st from Elder James White, concerning the state of the seventh-day movement, on the Pacific coast. The report is rather gloomy. He says that "June 4th, 1874, the first number of the Signs of the Times was issued at Oakland." This is a seventh-day paper. He says they are now in debt for paper and building, "6,532, 88, every dollar of which is needed to-day to meet demands, and properly carry forward the business of publishing." Near the close of the report he says:—

"In the foregoing we have labored to give a correct report. The task has been a painful one as we have been in a strait betwixt a desire that the friends of the cause should know the true state of things and understand how to govern their actions, and the disgust we have felt in making them public. A sense of these things pressed upon us toward the close of the late camp-meeting and made us very unhappy."
M. G.

WESTFIELD.—The meetings at Westfield are still increasing in power and interest. From seven to half-past seven we have a prayer meeting, then preaching, followed by an inquiry meeting, when many remain every evening for religious conversation. We look upon the inquiry meeting as a very important part of revival work. Where there are devoted lay members, who are willing to engage heartily in the inquiry meetings, after the preaching, blessed results are sure to follow. The most successful way to reach the unconverted, and lead them to Christ, is by personal effort in conversation and prayer. When a church, or individual, neglects this part of christian work, lukewarmness and formalism is pretty sure to follow, while sinners become hardened and indifferent. Let every disciple of Jesus strive to persuade others to be christians. M. G.

CRIME.—It is truly alarming to see how wickedness abounds at the present day. The blackest crimes are being multiplied in all directions. Accounts of fraud, burglary, arson, drunkenness, stealing, fornication, adultery and murder, are crowding the daily papers, and yet but few of some of these worst crimes come to the light. Truly the "wickedness is great," and the harvest must be near. As expressed in the Bible, they are "past feeling, having given themselves over to lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness." This class is now very large, and increasing rapidly in all parts of the world. The sight is a sad one, and affords abundant reason to cry, "Come, Lord Jesus." No better state of things may be expected till he comes.

Satan is doing up his last work, but it is terrible. Old and young, high and low, learned and unlearned, by the thousand and million, are pressing down the broad road, regardless of their perilous condition, because blinded by sin and the devil. They are walking as blind men on the margin of the pit of perdition. Their situation is awful in the extreme; and yet but few, even of those who profess to have been delivered from the same perilous condition, are willing to lift a warning voice to save them from destruction. These things ought not so to be. M. G.

ONTARIO.

The church in Ontario, N. Y., dedicated their new chapel Saturday, Dec. 4th. The house is the best in town; pleasantly and centrally located, and will hold about four hundred. Bro. J. E. Wells, the pastor, has made noble efforts to secure this house, and has before him an excellent prospect for continued success. The meetings Saturday, Dec. 3th, and Sunday, the 5th, were excellent. The house was densely crowded, and the prayer and conference meetings were of the first class. Some have already (Dec. 6th), decided to begin a new life in Christ. Some fifty or sixty Brn. and Srs. came from surrounding towns, from ten to fifty miles to attend the meetings, and added much to the interest. The preaching Brn. present were Brn. M. R. Miles, B. P. Stevens, W. J. Hobbs, E. C. Cowles, C. H. Williams, J. E. Wells, A. C. Newell, and A. H. Dunbar.

Sabbath evening, some fifty or sixtv remained to attend the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, after the crowd had departed. The Spirit of Jesus was present to comfort those who love the "blessed hope."

It is so arranged that any christian denomination can occupy the house when it is not wanted by those who built it. Meetings are to be continued every day during the coming week, and blessed results are expected. M. G.

PRESENTS.

This is the time when persons begin to think about making presents to their friends at Christmas, or New Year. Those who seek to please Jesus will take the most satisfaction in their gifts when they make such as will produce the greatest amount of good to those who receive them. Often presents are made of no real value, although costly. They yield no special benefit to the receiver, only the pleasure afforded in accepting them as tokens of friendship and love manifested by the giver.

We have been thinking it would be a nice thing for those who wish to make a valuable present at small expense; one that would be often repeated during the year, and continually affording information and comfort, to send the Crisis to some poor person, who loves Jesus, but is not able to take a paper. What an amount of joy and gladness might be afforded in this way to some lonely family. Is there not some poor christian family in your neighborhood, that would be greatly benefitted by the reading of "our paper?" Gladden the heart of that lonely widow fifty-two times a year, by sending her the paper. Do it for Jesus' sake. He says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me."

It is to be feared that the poor are too often forgotten by those in prosperity. When surrounded by books, papers, and a variety of the comforts of life, think of that family which is destitute of these things, and send them the Crisis to afford them weeky comfort during the coming year. It affords sweet satisfaction to make others happy, especially the poor. Jesus speaks very kindly of those who have pity upon the needy. Favors done to them afford blessings at compound interest. "The liberal soul shall be made fat."

Let all who can, send the Crisis to some poor saint, as a Christmas or New Year's gift, for the year 1876. Self-denial for this object will yield heavy dividends. Try it.
M. G.

PAPAL CORRUPTIONS.

It is no wonder that the Roman Catholic church is symbolized by a harlot, when we look at her shocking wickedness. She has not only corrupted all nations with her false doctrines, but those who are well acquainted say, her priests are notoriously licentious, and intemperate. They are as far from pure christianity as any class of unconverted men. A correspondent in Europe writes as follows:

"I have had a long talk with the Marchesa, of whom I wrote you as to the religious condition of Italy. She is a Roman Catholic, brought up by very bigoted parents, and was always taught to give the most implicit obedience to the priests and observe strictly the rites of the Romish religion. But she is a woman who thinks for herself; and she only confirms what many of the better class of Italians have already told me as to the horrible immorality of the cardinals and priests. She said, 'Our religion ought to be reformed; the confessional, the most infamous engine ever employed by mortal man, should be done away with; and the priests should be allowed to marry.' She then told me of a college for young men, where the director, himself a priest, supplied every means for the demoralization of the students, who were bound by oath not to reveal the iniquities practiced there. At last a young man, who was dying, cried out to his father, 'Do not, I entreat you, do not let my brother go to that dreadful place!' Questions were asked him, and very reluctantly he revealed enough to cause an investigation to be made. Attempts were made, as usual, to cover up the thing, but the facts disclosed were so shocking, that at the indignant insistance of the families whose sons and daughters had been betrayed in that den, the director was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment. The Marchesa added that the same immoralities are known to be practiced in other Roman colleges. Indeed, the profligacy, not of the vulgar priests alone, but of the cardinals, is common talk in Rome, and the subject of constant ridicule by the people. When I was in Paris an Italian gentleman came there saying, 'I have fled from Rome because I cannot live there and see the open licentiousness of the teachers of my religion.'"

No doubt this is a true picture of the real heart of Papacy. It is corrupt to the lowest degree, and it is being made "naked," as foretold by the prophet. The Roman "woman, is now being seen in her loathsomeness. The people in this country are beginning to awake to the fact that the Catholic power is a deadly enemy to our dearest interests, including religion, education, and everything else held valuable by Protestants, and should the Papal power gain the ascendancy, we should fare no better than the martyrs in the dark ages. The spirit of the Papacy is unchanged. It is only qniet from necessity. It is, however, making large preparations to regain its lost political dominion, but we believe the attempt will be a terrible failure. The struggle may be severe and bloody, but her destruction is sure, and evidently near at hand. The mighty Conqueror—the King of kings—may be expected in a little while. M. G.

THE KINGS AND HARLOT.

The kings hate the Harlot, and God says they shall "make her desolate and naked." The foretold antagonism to exist in the last days between these parties, is being rapidly developed. The church has become very boastful and defiant, while the kings are ever ready to taunt her with the loss of power and their utter disregard of her pretence to heavenly authority.

That she is very boastful, and possesses the same haughty, intolerant, persecuting spirit that she did when she lighted the faggot fires, and drove the saints into the wilderness and desolate mountains, is evident from the following item of news from Spain:

LONDON, Dec. 1. The authorities of Toledo, Spain, have closed the Protestant churches there, and expelled the pastor and schoolmaster.

She would do the same thing in every town and city on this continent, to-morrow, if she had the political power which she is seeking after.

But the kings or civil rulers, where they have experienced the venom of the serpent's sting, hate her encroachments upon their rights and sovereignty, as the following will show:—"Quite a stir has been created in Paris by the refusal of the Government to recognize a title of nobility conferred by the Pope, or to permit the newly made nobleman to bear it at all. It says that the Pope is no longer a temporal sovereign, and has no right to confer titles of nobility which shall come in competition with those granted by the monarchs of the earth. This creates a stir, because the Pope has been quite liberal with these favors of late, and there are a number of counts and dukes in the French capital, who spread their feathers among the finest, whose titles have emanated from the "Holy Roman Empire." What a pity if they should have to forego their nobility after all, and be but simple French citizens. The ardor of some of them in support of the church might fall a few degrees perhaps."—Boston Globe.

That the Jesuits in America have the same programme and defiant spirit against Protestantism and all civil government, which is not dictated and moulded by the infallable Pope's authority, is clearly exhibited by the circumstances which recently occurred in the State of Connecticut, and reported as follows:—"On Wednesday morning, Father McCartin, the Roman Catholic priest of this place, entered the school-room of the school in the North Centre district, and remained through the opening exercise, which consisted of reading from the New Testament, conducted by Mr. Day, the teacher. After the conclusion of the exercises the priest inquired of the teacher 'Under what authority he was acting? Mr. Day told him he supposed he had a perfect right to do as he did. The priest then addressed the children of his flock, and told them to turn to their studies whenever the teacher read the Bible. Mr. Day remonstrated, as this was contrary to their commands. The priest then repeated what he had said, and added, that if the teacher should punish any of them, that they should come to him and make complaint. The teacher complained of the matter to the Board of School Visitors, and on Saturday evening the matter was warmly discussed. As the new member of the Board is a Romanist, he took the most active part, and denounced the practice of reading the Bible in our common schools. The following resoiution was passed:

Resolved, That there is no impropriety for a teacher to open the morning session by reading a portion of the Bible, without making comments, and maintaining order while the same is being read, and any intererence therein will be regarded as an intrusion."

THE SCHOOL TROUBLE IN NEWTOWN.

Since our report of last week about the interference of the Catholic priest with the duties of Mr. Day, the teacher of the North Center District school in Newtown, further trouble has been experienced, as written by our correspondent.

Monday morning, while Mr. Day was opening school in the usual way, with Bible reading, etc., Father McCartin again entered the room and interrupted the exercises by speaking to his children and ordering them to pay no attention to the reading of the Bible. Mr. Day, knowing that he was acting in accordance with the instructions of the Board of Education and the Board of School Visitors, asked Father McCartin to leave the room, intimating that he was the head of the school, and that his commands must be obeyed. To this order Father McCartin paid no attention, but continued his interruption. Mr. Day, believing force justifiable in carrying out his orders, laid hands upon the priest and ejected him from the room, tearing his clothes somewhat in the struggle.

Our correspondent says there is great excitement throughout the town about the matter, and that serious trouble is apprehended. Mr. Day is bound to conduct the school as he sees fit, while Father McCartin seems bound to have the Bible expunged from the school. It is reported that each of the parties is trying to have the other arrested, Mr. Day for assaulting the priest, and Father McCartin for interrupting the school exercises and disorderly conduct in creating a disturbance. The school has been broken up for a time, and probably will not be opened regularly until the excitement has cooled down.

It is perfectly evident that these things are the premonitory symptoms of a terrible conflict between the kings and harlot.

LOOKING FOR THE MILLENNIUM.

"How many people there are who, looking for the early dawn of the millennium, must be discouraged when they learn that in the largest city of the Union it has hitherto been considered the proper thing for policemen to be on good terms with thieves."—Christian Union.

It depends on what kind of a millennium they are looking for. If for the ecclesiastical millennium of the world's conversion to Christianity by the combined efforts of Sectarianism, they have reason to be discouraged, by the aboundings of iniquity not only in the municipal, state, and national governments, but also in the churches themselves, which, full of worldliness and corruption at home, are sending missionaries to convert the heathen abroad. It is very questionable whether the number of true believers in Christ is any greater in proportion to the population of the globe now than in the first century of the Christian era. It may be that there is more profession, but not more faith. Indeed, the decline of faith is almost universally admitted, so that looking for a millennium of this sort might just as well be abandoned first as last.

But if it is the millennium of Christ's personal coming and reign on the earth that is looked for, there is no reason to be discouraged; for the present state of the world and the church answers unmistakably to the predictions of Christ and his apostles, that thus it shall be when the Son of man cometh. The corruption of society in general may resemble that of the days of Noah. The immorality of our city may put even Sodom to the blush; and the perilous times of the churches may already be upon us when multitudes profess godliness, but deny its power; and the scoffing cry be heard, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

It will not discourage the true believer who knows that these are the immediate antecedents of the coming of the Lord. He will only watch the more vigilantly, and pray the more frequently, and work the more vigorously, that he may escape the things that are coming upon the earth, and stand before the Son of man. The secularized churches, ever since the days of Constantine, have been expecting to bring about a millennium without the presence of Christ; but find themselves further from such a consummation than ever. On the other hand they who look for the coming of Christ to put down all opposing power, and establish his kingdom in righteousness and peace, are daily growing more hopeful of his near advent, as they witness the decline of faith and the increase of wickedness. Their constant watchword is, "Behold, he cometh!"—Times and Watchtower.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. THE DEITY OF CHRIST.

A. ROSS.

Since the publication of the Secretary's Report of the doings of the A. C. A., which met in Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., last August, I have been asked to explain through the Crisis what I meant by "exclusive Deity." Now, it should be remembered that at the time of the very brief discussion of the Address, participated in by Brn. Bowman, Sheldon, and others, when asked by the President of the A. C. A. to explain my meaning, my language was simply this: "I cannot in conscience modify my terms in the Address—'the essential Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ.' But I do not wish to be understood to mean that Christ is God the Father, but God the Son."

The sentiment I wished to convey in the explanatory remark was, that our Lord was not the Father personally, but that he was distinct from the Father in person, and at the same time possessing without limitation the same constituent elements of the divine nature, power, and glory, so that "in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," and that by virtue of his eternal divinity he was, and is, and will be God over all and rich unto all that call upon his name. And while I may undertake to affix to the foregoing a few thoughts, let me here remark that I consider the subject of Christ's essential Deity and union in the Godhead beyond the power or reach of human thought to discuss. Like infinity, it is taught and affirmed from the opening to the close of the Sacred Canon, but is not, neither can it be, explained to the comprehension of the human understanding. It is simply with us a matter of faith, based on the authority of the Divine Record. Who would undertake to comprehend or explain infinite space, infinite power, or infinite existence? Much less does it become us by our self conceited sophistry to undertake a solution of the sublime mystery, "God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." 1 Tim. 3:10.

Miracle is the wreath of power which alone encircles the brow of Omnipotence; or, is an ability to produce an effect independent of the operation of instituted laws. It is the glory of which Isaiah speaks thus: "I am the Lord; that is my name; and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images" (chap. 42:8). Did our Lord Jesus Christ perform miracles? The affirmative reply to this question absorbs the Old and New Testaments. "Who is the Creator of the ends of the earth, that fainteth not, that hath measured the water in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with a span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance; that taketh up the isles as a very little thing; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in? Lift up your eyes on high, and behold; who hath created these things? that bringeth out their host by number; he calleth them all by names, by the greatness of his might; for that he is strong in power; not one faileth."

From these lofty and sublime appeals of ancient prophets, who saw his glory and spake of him, for a reply let us turn our ear and attentively listen to "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight in the desert a highway for our God." "John bare witness of him, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me; for he was before me." "Ye yourselves bear me witness that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him." "He must increase, but I must decrease." "He that cometh from above [from heaven] is above all." John 1: 15; 3: 8, 30. And for an extended reply let us consider the testimony of the apostle John. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made. . . . He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." John 1: 1–3, 10.

Also, let Paul speak: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds. . . . And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands." Heb. 1:1, 2, 10. Again, from the same apostle: "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him." Col. 1: 16.

If we turn from his works of old to behold him in the likeness of sinful flesh, in fashion as a man, in the form of a servant, we see him standing in a delegated official capacity as the sent of the Father, the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, but at the same time by his own intrinsic divinity and power turning water into wine; feeding five thousand with that which would be a scanty supply for five men, and having an abundance left; commanding the elements, and lo, the winds and the seas obey him; instantaneously healing all manner of sickness and disease without medicine; rebuking demons, and they cry out, "Hast thou come to torment us before the time?"; speaking to the tenants of the dust, and lo, they spring to life again; and more than all this, exercising the divine, supreme prerogative in saying to the sin-palsied soul, "Go in peace, thy sins are all forgiven thee."

From these numerous manifestations of power, may we not like the Pharisees of old cry out (but with a better grace than they), "Who can forgive sins but God only?" Let us not be startled at the idea of giving him a name such as the Scriptures make most familiar—"Unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever"; while he himself hath declared, "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the ending." He is God manifested. No man hath seen God the Father at any time, but Jacob says, "I have seen God face to face" (Gen. 32: 30), one called a man, an angel, God. Hos. 12: 4.

The Elders "saw the God of Israel." Ex. 24: 10. Unto Moses the Lord spoke face to face. Ex. 33: 11. Joshua conversed with the adorable Captain of the Lord's host. Josh. 5: 15. Manoah feared, saying, "We shall surely die, because we have seen God." Isaiah cries, "Woe is me! for I am undone; . . . for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Isa. 6: 5. All of which sufficiently prove that he who was thus seen and conversed with by patriarchs and prophets was not God the Father, but none other than our Lord Jesus Christ, "who is over all, God blessed forever." Amen.

DID JESUS BAPTIZE?

N. STAPLES.

JOHN 4: 1, 2.—"When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John (though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples himself"). For a person to quote the first clause of v. 2, "Though Jesus baptized not," and argue that the Greek word "not," proves that Jesus did not baptize, would be doing like the wayward lad, who quoted Prov. 1: 10, omitting the last word, to justify his course; which, last word, had it been quoted, would have reversed his argument altogether. Arguing from v. 2, that Jesus did not baptize, but that his disciples did baptize, I think is contrary to Scripture, and therefore wrong. The Greek word, ouk, in v. 2, rendered "not," is also rendered "none" twenty times in the New Testament. It is also once rendered "no man" in 2 Cor. 11: 19. The word alla, rendered "but" in v. 2, is rendered "save."

I think the import of v. 2 is, "Jesus baptized none save [or except] his disciples." But if any are incredulous as to this being the true meaning of v. 2, please turn to John 3: 22, and read: "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized." And if they believe not this, "Neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

I think the disciples were not commissioned to baptize till after Christ's resurrection, and then their commission was not in force till the descent of the Holy Ghost, which took place on the day of Pentecos.

EARNESTNESS.

L. B. WEAVER.

I have felt for a long time as if we were not earnest enough in the cause of Christ, that we did not fully realize the importance of being in earnest, when we know that time is so short. While I have read with the deepest interest of the great revivals that follow the labors of Bro. Moody, I have felt as if we needed more earnest workers in the cause of our Master. In the silent hours of night I have often wet my pillow with tears while praying for the cause of God to be revived.

Do we believe that Jesus is coming so soon as the signs now indicate? Do we believe that we must soon stand before the Judge of all the earth, and there give an account of how we have passed our time here? It seems to me that if I could only get up from this bed of sickness and suffering, I would work valiantly and earnestly to win souls to Jesus. But while I lie here I am not idle. God knows I am in earnest to do all that lies in my power to fill the mission he assigns me here. When I realize how soon we are to be arraigned before the bar of God to pass the solemn test, I feel that there is nothing too hard for me to do if Jesus is only with me.

We are in the last day perils. The day of mercy will soon be past, and oh! how many there are who might now be saved. May we be more and more in earnest to persuade men and women to flee to the ark of safety. Do we show to those who are out of Christ, by our daily life, that we are in earnest in these things? Do our words, our actions, our dealings with them, show that we expect soon to change this mortal life for an immortal one, where all is fair, and no sorrow can come? Do people know by becoming acquainted with us that we are engaged in the work of God? Life or death is before us. Shall we choose life eternal, and all the blessedness there is in the kingdom of our Redeemer, or shall we, for the sake of a little gain, choose death? This is a momentous question. Every thing we have that can tell for God and his truth, ought now to be in action. O, look about thee, and see if thy garments are all white and pure, free from the world; look into your hearts also, and see if you are all ready to meet the Master, who is so soon coming. When the trumpet sounds, there will be no more time to work. Is every thing now right between you and God, and between you and your brothers and sisters? Are you doing all you can to build up each other?

Dear brethren and sisters, the times in which we live are perilous, and we must stand up for Jesus, or he will not stand up for us when he comes. If earnest workers were ever needed, they are needed now.

North Dana, Mass.

"AWAKE OUT OF SLEEP."

C. B. PRESTON.

Brethren, "now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." Why I say "brethren," is because the apostle is referring to believers, or in other words, sleepy believers. We look at the professed Christians of the present day, and how do we find them? Do we find them up and doing, realizing the night is far spent, the day is at hand? Ah, no. The majority of them are in a drowsy, sleepy state, waiting for some change in business, or of some other kind. They are so stupid and sleepy that they cannot see that the day of judgment is right here upon us.

This drowsiness in the church of Christ has not been but a few years, which indicates the soon coming of our Master. "Because iniquity shall abound,"—that is, in the last days, when perilous times shall come, "the love of many shall wax cold." We know that this state of things cannot last long because the church is in such a state. Look at the churches in New York City. They are actually trying to buy converts. We extract the following from the New York Sun:—

"At a Ministerial Conference lately held in New York City, the discussion of the question, 'What grounds have we to expect an unusual religious revival in this city during the following winter, and what methods, if any, should we adopt to accomplish such results?' was introduced by the Rev. Dr. Terry, who thought that the large congregation that greeted Moody and Sankey on Sunday indicated the event of a great religious awakening. He said that the churches of the city were greatly overburdened with debt, and that they cannot get money except by clap-trap extortions, such as fairs and festivals. One church, he added, has introduced 'kissing festivals,' and another offers a new chromo to every convert. The Rev. Dr. Wm. Corbit said that the M. E. Church in New York City had not been in so deplorable a condition for the past twenty-five years."

Brethren, the sure word of prophecy is being fulfilled before our eyes. Can we mistake it? No.

"Soon the joyful news will come,
Child, your Father calls, Come home!"

Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus.

QUESTIONS.—We read that Philip was "caught away" after baptizing the eunuch. What is the word in the original for "away" in this passage, and how many different renderings can it have?

We read that Paul was "caught up to the third heaven" "into paradise." Is the "paradise" and the "third heaven" of this passage on the new earth? What is the original for "up" in this passage, and how many different renderings can it have?

We read that those alive when Jesus comes will be "caught up." What is the original for the word "up" in this place, and how many renderings can it have?

HATLEY.—The Lord is reviving his work in Hatley. Several have started to serve him, and to look for his Son from heaven. Wanderers have been revived, and have fully consecrated all to God. The Lord is helping us here. C. S. SHATTUCK.

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. H. Ward.

Dear Editors:—I was born in Massachusetts in 1813, brought up under the most rigid rules of Presbyterianism, and taught to believe what the minister said was all right, and that that was all we need to know about the Bible. The minister could do the preaching and all the praying for the people, except the deacons, as they were about the only ones that we ever heard say anything in the meetings.

At the age of twelve years, I thought I met with a change of heart at a revival season, but I gradually lost my interest in religious things. Some four years after, during another revival season, I awoke from my slumbers, and at that time united with the Congregational church. Having been sprinkled in infancy, which they call baptism, it was very easy to get into the church. I held my standing with that church until 1836, when I moved, with the rest of my father's family, to western New York, where I was thrown into the society of Free-will Baptists. After associating with them, attending their meetings, and hearing the subject of baptism explained, I was induced to look into the matter, and was soon satisfied that immersion was the only baptism taught in the Bible, and at the first opportunity I was baptized, and united with the Free-will Baptist church, taking an active part with them.

In 1843, I think it was, I was in Buffalo, in company with our minister from Boston, Erie Co., N. Y., and hearing that Bro. Geo. Storrs was lecturing there on the prophecies, we went to hear him, as we both felt interested in the subject. At the close of the meeting, Bro. Storrs gave me his "Six Sermons." I thanked him, and as soon as I found time began to read them, but became disgusted and put them aside. After some days I took up the book again and read some more, but I said to my wife, "I can find plenty of Scripture to set at rest all such stuff as that"; but in looking for the language I was so sure I could find, instead of finding it in the Bible, I found it in the hymn-book; and you can judge of my surprise. From that time I began to read the Bible for myself. I thank the Lord my eyes have been opened to see the truth as it is in Jesus, and that I can rejoice in the blessed promises made to the fathers. I have been called a heretic by some of my warmest friends, and my name has been cast out as evil by them, but that did not hurt me, for I knew whom I had believed, and what I believed, and could give a reason for my hope.

How strange that people can be so blind in this day and age of the world, especially those who profess to make the Bible their study, and pretend to be teachers in spiritual things; indeed, their teaching is too spiritual, so much so that there is no substance. O, that God's Spirit might open the eyes of the children of men to see the truth, for it seems to me that the time is very short, that probation will soon close, when He will come whose right it is to reign. Amen; may he come quickly.

When we have labored and toiled on through poverty and disappointment beyond life's summit, and begin to go down the rough way, and our infirmities increase upon us, it is then we begin to sigh for rest; and I thank the Lord I find a rest spoken of in his holy Word that will be a rest indeed. Here awhile we labor during the day, and our physical powers are exhausted, and we look forward to the night as our time to rest; but this is only for a few short hours, and then comes another day of toil. There is, or has been, a long night of rest in the grave, the land of the enemy, for the prophets and the ancients, but it will not seem long to them, for "the dead know not anything." But this is not the rest that I am looking forward to as the most to be desired. The rest I want is not in the night, but in the day; yes, blessed day, for "there shall be no night there." One of the glories of that day will be that those who dwell there will never say "I am tired." There will be no need of night for the weary ones to rest in, for it will be the rest that remains to the children of God;—not a day of inactivity, but of activity without being tired; for it is said of the redeemed—"They shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

What glorious things are prepared for those who love and obey God. Jesus said to his disciples, as he was about to leave them—"In my Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." O, blessed promise! Are we looking for its speedy fulfillment? If so, are we ready, with our lamps trimmed and burning? If so, happy are we, for we can say from the heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Editors of Crisis:—May God bless you all, is my prayer, and enable you to still send forth meat in due season to the hungry, perishing poor, who are starving for the bread of life. I love the Crisis, because it brings such rich food to my hungry soul. I love to hear the good old story of my Savior's coming. How I love his dear name! He washed me in his own blood forty-five years ago the first day of this month. Blessed be his name! I have loved him ever since, and that blood saves me now. While I am writing, I feel its healing streams flowing in my poor heart, and it swells with rapturous emotion. My all is on the altar. I am waiting to hear the trumpet sound, and be gathered with all the blood-washed in my Eden home.

Brethren, look up! He is coming whose right it is to reign, and he will take the kingdom, and possess it for ever. Amen. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

Dear Brn and Srs.:—I think of the good meetings we have had together at Alton Bay and at other places, and it makes me think of the home we are going to have by-and-by, where we shall not have to part if we prove faithful. The Lord help us to be real good, and may we love him with all our hearts.

I wish to say a word to the young people that went to Bro. Leslie's tent-meeting at Alton Bay. Be of good cheer, the Lord is coming soon, and then we shall not have any more trials. Bear every cross; give all for Jesus. If we love Jesus, we shall keep all his commandments. The dear Lord help you all, is the prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ. Pray for me.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Dec. 7. A Herald cable dispatch, dated Madrid, midnight, says the message of President Grant occasions great excitement. A complete summary of the Cuban question was cabled to Senor Collantes, minister of foreign affairs, and an informal meeting of the ministry was held to-night. A day's delay in sending in the message is regarded suspiciously, and the belligerency disclaimer will be variously discussed in to-morrow's papers. Duplicity will probably be charged, and the ultra organs intimate threats of Carlist recognition. The newspapers are issuing extras, and the streets are crowded. The excitement is equal to that shown over the Virginius affair.

Washington, Dec. 9. A high Government official states that the forthcoming message on Cuba will contain statements of startling interest, and full justify the naval preparations. This officer adds that it is by no means certain that our negotiations with Spain can be successfully terminated without danger or grave complications.

Montreal, Dec. 8. A special telegram to the Witness from Oka, an Indian village on the Ottawa river, says the Protestant Indian church was completely demolished yesterday by a mob of French Canadians (Roman Catholics), the roof, steeple and walls being leveled to the ground.

Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 9. A convention of city and town officials from twenty-five cities and towns was held here yesterday to consider the tramp evils. Resolutions were adopted that workhouses be established and that no stranger be given charity who will not work, and that magistrates be empowered to commit vagrants to workhouses, and in places where there are none, they be committed to a chain gang to work on roads, etc.

"FOLLOW ME."

M. V. SALTMARSH.

Words which Christ the Lord hath spoken,
"Take thy cross and follow me.
Wouldst thou gain that home eternal?
Wouldst thou all my glory see?
Then thy cross with meekness bear,
And a crown thou soon shalt wear."

"Take thy cross!" O shall I take it?
Can I bear it here below?
Can I follow in His footsteps?
Must I toil and suffering know?
Yes, the cross I'll gladly take,
Bear it here for Jesus' sake.

"Follow me!" Now I behold him
Wandering o'er life's thorny way;
Giving light to those in darkness,
Pointing them to "perfect day."
His was not a life of ease,
He sought not himself to please.

Doing good to all around him,
Speaking words of love and cheer
To the hearts bowed down with sorrow,
He to help was ever near.
Burdened ones, in homes of grief,
Found from Jesus sweet relief.

Weary oft with steady toiling,
Sorrow, hunger, pain he knew;
Patiently he was enduring
All, for joys that were in view.
Yes, he suffered this unrest
That earth's children might be blest.

Jesus, now I hear thee saying—
"If ye suffer, ye shall reign
With me in my glorious kingdom,
When I come to earth again.
There are joys and mansions bright
Just beyond these scenes of night."

By his grace I'll follow closely
Where his feet shall mark the road,
Sweetly trusting that he'll bring me
Safely to his bright abode.
Where these toils and trials cease,
Where with Christ I'll rest in peace.

Haverhill, Mass.

FROM ALABAMA TO ARKANSAS.

To THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brn.:—While I am here waiting for a boat at this little town (Newport) on White river, in Jackson Co., Ark., I thought I would drop a line to the loved and scattered abroad, and let them know how the Lord has led me.

On Wednesday, after the fifth Sunday in October, I visited a new place on Mud Creek, in Alabama, and preached three times. The audiences were small, but the interest as good as I could ask. One precious brother, A. J. Armstrong, of that place, is so interested in these great truths, that he gave me ten dollars to send to the Crisis office for books for himself. He also requested baptism, and I have made an appointment to baptize him in December.

The following Sunday, at Bethel, near Ottewah, Tenn., I found the little flock strong in the Lord. Last Monday I started for De View, Arkansas. After having bought supplies, and provided for my family's comfort during my absence, and buying my ticket over the celebrated Iron Mountain route, I had only two dollars left. With this I started with Bro. D. B. Waldrop, who had two and a half dollars. I bought my ticket in Chattanooga for Little Rock, and when at Stevenson, we went to the ticket office to buy Bro. Waldrop's ticket. They had none by this route, so at McKensy, Tenn., Bro. Waldrop changed cars to go by Memphis, and then over that very dangerous Memphis and Little Rock road to Brinkley, where he will have to walk forty miles to meet me at De View.

I came on to Union City, and then by Charleston, Mo., and Poplar Bluffs, then on the great Texas route to this place, where I landed last night at ten o'clock, expecting to find a boat making close connections for Augusta, where I expected to meet some of the brethren with conveyance to take me to De View. I was told that the boat would not come till morning, and I began to wonder what I should do here among strangers, and with only full two dollars, and if I gave that for lodging, how was I to get along on the boat? At last I thought of selling my ticket for the balance of the way from here to Little Rock. I proposed to lose ninety-five cents from the regular fare, and take three dollars and a half for the ticket. I soon found a purchaser, and I then felt that I could go to a hotel. I found the landlord very kind, and after telling him my mission, he charged me only fifty cents for bed and breakfast. And now, at three o'clock, P. M., I hear the boat coming. More, anon. Pray for me.

Thursday, A. M., Nov. 18th. I left Newport last evening at four o'clock, and came down White River on the steamer "John Howard" to this place (Augusta), where we landed at eight o'clock. We came through some of the richest country I ever saw, covered in places for miles with heavy forest and cane, and said to abound with wild game, such as bears, deer, and turkeys.

I can but contrast the difference in passing over the Iron Mountain road and my trip last year over the long, dangerous trestle on the Memphis and Little Rock road, with the long transfer through the city of Memphis—all of which is avoided over this elegant road. For the benefit of traveling friends, and not from any interest of or in the road, I want to say to all who are going west via Chattanooga, be sure that your tickets are over the St. Louis, Iron Mountain, and Southern Railway. This is the best route. I have tried both, and know that this is the most pleasant route, passing through Kentucky and Missouri, making close connections, and for the same money, and occupying the same time to Little Rock and other points in the west as it does to go by Memphis. I am now within fifteen miles of De View, where I expect to meet Bro. Waldrop, and spend a few days preaching the good news to sinners.

Bro. John Raymond has come here to meet me and take me to De View. I am praying the Lord to be with us, and that the people may be benefitted by our visit. I am sorry to say that just before I left home, Bro. R. J. Wilson, a minister of the M. E. church, south, came to see me with a complaint because I had written in the Crisis last June about his terrible effort to overturn our views. He said I ought not to write to "Northern" papers about the treatment I received. He said it would stir up sectional strife, and keep it up between the north and south. I told him that with christians there is no such strife. He said they had a perfect right to close their churches against me, and that I ought not to write about it. I told him that if the house belonged to the "Methodists" they had that right, but if it was God's house they had no such right.

I am expecting much tribulation here in this western country. Please pray for me. Yours in Jesus. JOHN A. CARGILE.

Augusta, Ark., Nov. 18th, 1875.

THE lessons of life are slowly learned.

SALVATION.

R. F. ELDREDGE.

What a grand, what a blessed theme on which to dwell. How sweetly it strikes on the ear. Yet it is far more blessed to know that this salvation is ours, that it dwells within us. How it inspires the heart with love and praise to the Giver of this salvation. How it takes the affections from earthly things, and places them upon heaven and things divine. It prepares us for the trials which are incidental to this life, and gives joy and peace which earth, with all its broadest wisdom and transitory joys, cannot give.

When a sinner starts for the kingdom, renounces the world, and is in earnest for this salvation, and like the penitent publican prays—"God be merciful to me a sinner," how soon that soul is set at liberty, and receives this salvation, which enables him to rejoice in God, who can save, redeem, and make all glorious within. It is not strange they give expression to their joy in songs of praise, when their chains fall off, and they enter the strait gate, and go free.

No wonder that those who have entered that gate rejoice when others find it. What a union of spirit, what a fellowship, what a oneness is realized by those in the way Zionward, whose allegiance is to the King of glory, whose home is the heavenly city—"the New Jerusalem," where God and the angels dwell. Blessed home!

"Salvation! O, the joyful sound,
What pleasure to my ears;
A sovereign balm for every wound,
A cordial for our fears."

It is, indeed, a joyful sound, and we rejoice that it ever reached our ears. Precious boon! What a balm to the wounded heart, what a cordial to the stricken spirit, and manna to the hungry soul. It is free for all; all may come to this living fountain, and so drink that their spirits will be refreshed, and so eat of that "living bread," that they may feel strengthened to proceed on in their pilgrimage towards Mount Zion, the city of the living God.

Although this salvation is free for all who will accept of it, yet do we realize as we should, that it cost even the precious blood of Jesus to purchase it? Do we realize that heaven was bereft of its brightest jewel for our sakes? The gift of God is indeed the "unspeakable gift." And while we thankfully receive the "gift," let us remember the Giver. How great and wonderful was his love for sinners, that he should condescend to give his only begotten Son to die for a lost and ruined world, although he knew of the cruel death that awaited his dear and well beloved Son, for he had seen the cross before that cross was formed. He had heard the cruel shouts, "Crucify him! Away with him," even before those shouts were uttered, yet he withheld not his Son. Oh, heart of adamant, that will not melt in view of such suffering, condescension, and love!

Dear unconverted reader, come to Jesus, and accept of this salvation while it is offered to you. Come, for you can have it freely, without money and without price. Come now, for Jesus stands with open arms, ready to receive you. Come to-day, for you have not the promise of to-morrow. "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be like crimson, they shall be as wool." Come and accept Him who is "altogether lovely," that when he comes to make up his jewels, you may be one of that happy number.

Chatham, Mass.

WORKMEN, AROUSE.

E. S. CRAIG.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—MATT 5: 16.

Standing as we Philadelphians do to-day, upon the threshold of the expected revival, there are none who can say with a deeper fervency than myself, God bless the efforts of our brethren Moody and Sankey in their unselfish work. But as I utter this prayer, I cannot refrain from uttering another with equal earnestness, Oh, God, for thine own name's honor and glory, enlighten their minds; let them not preach that fearful doctrine, eternal torment, blighting thereby the character of the God of love and mercy.

None know, perhaps, experimentally, more perfectly than myself, the horrors connected with this thought. I stand to-day almost alone in the world as regards family relationship. My loved ones are sleeping in death, and so far as human knowledge can ascertain, they are sleeping without hope in Christ, none of them having yielded themselves to God, unless it might have been in a dying hour. Before I heard the glorious doctrine of the coming and kingdom of Christ, my hopes of future happiness were all connected with the eternal torment of those loved ones. In the midnight hour I have started and awakened from frightful dreams of the judgment seat, when my precious ones whom I loved, notwithstanding they loved not God, were torn from my arms and cast into that fearful hell. I was taught to believe that they would remain there conscious of suffering throughout eternity; while I, within hearing of their groans of agony, would be praising God for his goodness.

I had one gentle sister. A more lovely and affectionate girl never lived; but her life was a thoughtless and careless one, and when I would urge and entreat her to become a christian, she would answer —"Not yet, Emma. I mean to be one sometime, but I am young now, and want to enjoy life." Thus she put it off, and at the age of twenty-eight, she was stricken down at once to unconsciousness, and without any apparent change, she passed away. For weeks and months, I saw nothing else, whether asleep or awake, but that lovely girl writhing in the torments of hell; and she who was refined, intellectual, and beautiful, the companion of devils of the darkest hue! I tried in vain to love God. I tried to love him whose compassion to my senses was inhuman, much less divine. Friends labored and prayed with me, and talked to me of a rebellious heart. I tried to be reconciled to what they told me was the justice and wisdom of God, but it was in vain. When I opened God's Word I tried to entangle it. I wanted to be an infidel, but thank God, he by his Holy Spirit withheld me, and led me into truth. Yes, blessed truth, that excludes an endless hell, and upholds a God of love. It has permeated my being with love to him. Yes, thank God, his holy word does not teach endless torment. O, I would that the masses might believe it; that these words of truth might reach to the ends of the earth, and not be confined to the few.

We have some noble men on Zion's walls, who are fearlessly preaching the truth, despite the opposition and scorn of the devotees of eternal fire and brimstone. We naturally listen with horror to the tales of the Inquisition; but, reader, the horrors of the Roman persecution are but an atom compared with an Orthodox hell!

Oh, brethren and sisters, it is high time that we awake out of our sleep, and scatter what knowledge God has given us to the enlightening of the world. There are scores of you who profess to believe in the speedy coming of the Lord, who are idly sitting by while sinners are dying, and thousands of deluded professors are groping in the dark. I long to see the time when I may hear the truth echoed from corner to corner throughout the city. There is talent enough in this city alone among the Advent people to bring scores daily to the truth through the blessing of God. When will the people arouse and herald the news?

Sisters, we may not stand upon Zion's walls, perhaps, but we have a work to do at home. Our little ones need to be trained from their infancy in the doctrines of the word and the love of God. Do not wait until they have become grown before you think their minds will grasp knowledge; they may not listen to you then. Their minds may then be filled with other thoughts, and you will be too late, perhaps, to impress them. No, mothers, begin early with your children, if in the reaping day you would carry your sheaves to the garner of God.

BE THOU FAITHFUL.

L. SHRINER.

Be thou faithful, just before thee
Hangs a glitt'ring crown in view;
Though temptations press thee sorely,
Let them not thy trust undo.

Be thou faithful, Jesus loves thee,
Yearns to keep thee near his side;
Only trust him, trust him fully,
Then life's storms thou wilt outride.

Be thou faithful, Jesus gives thee
Talents which thou should'st employ;
He requires some service of thee
If his rest thou would'st enjoy.

Be thou faithful, fields are whitening,
Lo, the harvest time's in view;
Few the laborers now inquiring,
"Lord, what wilt thou have me do?"

Be thou faithful, go and labor;
Work where'er there's work to do;
Trust in Jesus, do not falter,
He will guide thee safely through.

Be thou faithful; soon He's coming;
With him his reward he'll bring;
Then with shouts of glad rejoicing
Shall the heavenly mansions ring.

REPORT OF TENT MEETING.

In company with Bro. F. E. Blaisdell, we pitched the Evangel Tent in West Waterville, Me., the first of September. West Waterville is a flourishing manufacturing town, noted for its scythes and axes. Our tent was located in the central part of the village. Our faith was new to most in the place. We had not much encouragement to set our tent up except that we understood it to be the will of our heavenly Father. Our meetings were well attended, although there was much opposition from some of the preachers and others. We were informed that one went to the town authorities to prevent us from holding our meetings, because the people would get crazed, and sell their property, etc. This same man made himself less honorable in the minds of good men as a man and a christian teacher by his public lectures against our blessed hope.

The second week of our meeting, we met with a person we had been acquainted with thirty years ago, who was one of the prominent members of the Methodist church at that time. We had often held sweet communion together in prayer and praise, but he had fallen into infidelity through the dogma of man's natural immortality. He came to have a talk with me in our tent. It was sad to see one of the best intellects, and one who had been so devoted and useful in the Master's cause, so completely given over to Spiritualism. He told me he was driven to his conclusions by the teachings he had received from the commonly received theology. We had a very friendly talk for two hours. At the close he wished me to meet him again. At our second meeting, he frankly acknowledged that he did not know about our faith, and wished me to inform him as to the basis of our faith, that he could give it some consideration.

We had a very good time in presenting the Bible hope of man's future eternal life through Christ only, and his inheritance on the earth by the resurrection from the dead at the Lord's appearing and kingdom. He saw a harmony in the Bible, in the literal interpretation, which he never saw before. It seems astonishing that such plain teachings have been mystified so long, and yet so many still cling to its spiritual and mystified interpretations.

Our meetings continued four weeks with increasing interest to the close, although the weather was cold, and we were obliged to put a stove in our tent the last two weeks. The meeting houses were all closed against us. In conversation with a person about holding meetings in his house, he said we were infidels in not believing man's natural immortality. I asked him to tell me what an infidel was. He said one that did not believe the Bible. I told him the Bible said God "only hath immortality," and I believed it. He denied it, and who was the infidel? Many saw the harmony of the Bible, and some confessed it was true we had the truth. Others believed, and were blessed by confessing it. Some were reclaimed, and some converted. Others who believed in the blessed truth, kept back, doubtless for fear of reproach. The Lord has raised up a few to hold up the light in the place, who have established meetings in a hall. Some are waiting an opportunity to follow their Lord in baptism.

We praise the Lord for his goodness to us through the tenting season. We had those to unite in our labor that have the love of the cause at heart. Many have heard, for the last time, of Jesus' coming, during our meetings, without doubt. God must give the increase, or all will be in vain. My prayer is that the seed sown may fall into good and honest hearts, and bring forth fruit unto eternal life. I am more and more satisfied that our position is correct, and signs are now speaking in thunder tones in the nation's, as we have long expected they would.

Dear brethren in the ministry, let us maintain this position like men of God. The coming of Jesus is the main truth and the mainspring to the church of God, but I fear many are withholding the meat due at this time, being contented to settle down and preach to a few brethren and sisters in one place, while thousands around us are in darkness as to the glorious light that shines on our pathway. Let us awake and put forth every effort, for the conflict is sharp and will be short. The storm cloud is thickening fast. Our Deliverer will come while the nations are angry. Oh, how blessed to be found at our post, and share the glory of the kingdom with all the loved saints. May it be our lot to be there, is my prayer.

H. B. SEVEY.

IDOLS.

J. H. F. VARNEY.

A few years since, while laboring in a precious revival of the work of God with a church in Central New Hampshire, I became much attached to a remarkably bright little boy of some six years of age; and as the attachment was mutual, we became fast friends, and of course very confidential. While walking to meeting one evening, his hand in mine, with his little sweet face, every lineament of which beamed with frankness and truth, upturned to mine, we held the following conversation:

"And so you are a little Christian?"

"Yes, sir."

"You love the Lord?"

"O! yes, sir."

"And, of course, if you love him you want him to come again?"

"No, I don't" (very decidedly).

"But how is that, my little brother? I thought that one that we loved we always wanted to see."

"But, you see, he will burn my calves up."

Here then, was the difficulty. The stable we had just passed contained his heart's dearest idol, a pair of calves. I thought, what a sermon for little lips to utter; for while men are only "children of a larger growth," I knew that Herbert had not only expressed his own feelings on the subject, but the feelings of hundreds of others. How many have houses, farms, cattle, horses, mills, mortgages, bonds, bank or other stocks on which their hearts' affections are centred? I am well aware that God's people may hold a certain amount of earth's riches, and be no less his people; but how conveniently near has the devil laid the snare of idolatry and covetousness, into which if a man falls he will lose the kingdom.

Let no one suppose that this snare endangers the rich alone, for it is so skillfully laid that it takes the poor as well. One class covetously keep what they have; while another covetously long for what they have not. One may be as truly idolatrous as the other, and in equal danger of suffering the awful penalty thereof. I know of some whom God has blessed with riches who are nobly and generously dealing it out for the honor and glory of God, and the good of his people; and others without a dollar scarcely, who, I fear, are covetous enough to secure their own damnation. Others there are who care little for this, but, oh! how they worship worldly aggrandizement!

After all, how foolish christians are to allow themselves to be destroyed by such means. Suppose a man is successful, and adds to his possessions until he is abundantly satisfied (if such a thing could be). In a little while time bids him leave it, and if he refuse, death lays him down, and his neighbors come and bear him away, and selecting a small piece of land from his broad acres just large enough to contain the little house they will make for him, they leave him there to rest until his Judge shall call. Of what value will be the emoluments or pleasures of the world to the man who listens to the sharp, reverberating peals of the last trump, causing the heart of nature to stand still, and old earth to tremble until she shall lose her hold of the dead saints, and they go up to meet the Lord in the air, while he, with a crazed brain, shall be calling on the mountains to fall on him and forever shut out the dreadful scene? And as the saved ones enter the city of God, all aglow with precious stones, the gold there so plenty that it has been made into streets, and the surroundings such as to leave no wish ungratified, what value, think you, would they put upon old earth with all its riches, glory, and pleasures?

May God help us, dear brethren and sisters, standing as we do just on the confines of eternity, to cast down every idol, to lay aside every weight, that we, as good stewards, may be prepared to welcome the Master when he comes. O, let each heart be raised to the great Helper in the language of the poet—

"The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from thy throne,
And worship only thee.
So shall my walk be close with God,
Calm and serene my frame,
And clearer light shall mark the road
That leads me to the Lamb."

— Gratitude and prayer are always suitable and becoming, as we are ever in want, and God is always giving.

— To persevere in one's duty, and to be silent, is the best answer to calumny.

— In vain do they talk of happiness who never subdued an impulse in obedience to principle.

— Many excuse themselves from laying out in charity under pretence of laying up for it.

— Don't cherish your sorrows; when God breaks all of our idols in pieces, it is not for us to put the broken bits together again.

— Nothing is so easy as to revenge an offence; nothing is so honorable as to pardon it.

— It is doubtful if any man could by any possibility do his noblest or think his deepest, without a preparation of suffering.

— True liberty consists in the privilege of enjoying our own rights, not in the destruction of the rights of others.

— Few things are necessary for the wants of this life, but it takes an infinite amount to satisfy the demands of public opinion.

— Ingratitude is a crime so shameful that the man has not yet been found who would acknowledge himself guilty of it.

— Do not be afraid of diminishing your own happiness by seeking that of others.

ON INFIDELITY.

JOHN MCLEAN.

It is amidst trials and sorrows that infidelity appears in its most just and frightful aspect. When subject to the multifarious ills which flesh is heir to, what is there to uphold our spirit but the discoveries and the prospects that are unfolded to us by revelation? What, for this purpose, can be compared with the belief that every thing here below is under the management of Infinite Wisdom and Goodness, and that there is an immortality of bliss awaiting those who seek for it in the world to come?

If this conviction be taken away, what is it that we can have recourse to on which the mind may patiently and safely repose in the season of adversity? Where is the balm which I may apply with effect to my wounded heart, after I have rejected the aid of the almighty Physician? Impose upon me whatever hardship you please, give me nothing but the bread of sorrow to eat, take from me the friends in whom I had placed my confidence, lay me in the cold hut of poverty, and on the thorny bed of disease, set death before me in all its terrors—do all this, yet let me trust in my Savior, and pillow my head on the bosom of Omnipotence, and I will fear no evil. I will rise superior to affliction, and rejoice in my tribulation. But let infidelity interpose between God and me, and draw its impenetrable veil over a future state of existence, and limit all my trust to the creatures of a day, and all my expectations to a few years, as uncertain as they are short, and how shall I bear up with fortitude, or with cheerfulness under the burden of distress? Or where shall I find one drop of consolation to put into the bitter draught which has been given me to drink?

I look all over the range of this wilderness in which I dwell, and except in the teachings of christianity, I see not one covert from the storm, nor one cup of cold water to refresh me in the weariness and the faintings of my pilgrimage.

MOODY AN ADVENTIST.

When Mr. Varley, the English evangelist, was in New York, he told the people that he believed the Lord would make his second advent before his hairs were gray. It now turns out that Mr. Moody is of the same opinion. Before he left Brooklyn he had a lengthy interview with Mr. Beecher, in which he fully expressed this faith. We take the following extract from a lengthy editorial in Mr. B's paper, the Christian Union of last week:

"The fundamental idea of Mr. Moody is, that Christ is to come a second time to reconstruct the world, and that that coming may be at any hour—this year, this month, to-morrow, perhaps; that the world will never be made any better by any or all human influences, and will go on from bad to worse till Christ comes with power to destroy and rebuild; that all labor in building up society as such, and all laws, governments, industries, institutions, will fail to ameliorate the condition of the great world which 'lieth in wickedness,' and that we can do no more than to snatch as many as possible from impending ruin, without any thought or waste of time upon human society. To him the world is a wreck, fast foundering. It is no use to try to save it. Its leaks cannot be stopped. It is steadily settling. It can never be towed to harbor. It must inevitably go under. All that can be done is to get a life-boat to it, and save as many of its passengers as possible. Everything else is labor thrown away."

There is no mistake as to the correctness of this statement. The Philadelphia Times of the 22nd inst., reports Mr. Moody as saying at a private interview:

"The statement of Mr. Beecher in his last sermon is correct, that I feel that the Lord may visit this world a second time at any moment; that we are like unto shipwrecked sailors at sea, and may be rescued at any moment; that our mood of mind should be as if waiting, saying, 'Christ may come this month, this week;' he may come to-morrow.'"

Mr. Moody has been severely criticised for directing so much of his effort to making men christians and so little to instructing them in the after duties of a christian life. Against this complaint the Philadelphia correspondent of the New York Tribune thus defends him, in the issue of the 25th inst.:

"It should be remembered by those who make this criticism, that the great preacher is a firm believer in the immediate second coming of Christ. He is looking for the end of the world and the appearance of the Savior every day and hour. No wonder, then, that he does not think it worth while to talk about business and social morality. He is perfectly consistent. Why should he try to tell people how to live, when the important thing is to prepare them for death. and the last judgment? Why trouble himself about the affairs of the household, the street and the mart, when he expects every moment to see the world rolled up like a scroll?"

Now, in all this we "do rejoice, and will rejoice." When it is remembered that Mr. Moody's name is a household word throughout Christendom, and that the statement of his faith will undoubtedly go the round of the press, and that thus the attention of millions will be called to this glorious but neglected christian doctrine, we can but recognize in it the providence of God. At a time when the secret of Mr. Moody's power is being everywhere discussed, it goes forth to the world that his tremendous earnestness, to which it is generally attributed, is born of that mighty motive—the "coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him," and the solemn fact that beyond that point there is no hope for the impenitent.

If the doctrine of the advent is generally unpopular, and if we who are technically known as Adventists must share its unpopularity, and thus our sphere of labor be circumscribed, still we rejoice that the doctrine reaches the people, though it may be somewhat dimmed by the popular errors concerning man's nature and destiny by which it is surrounded. Let the Lord send by whom he will!

The time may come when a wider door will open to us. Nothing succeeds like success. The really spiritual among the churches are tired of the powerless essay-preaching which they hear from week to week. Knowing something of the power of God, they recognize it in others, and are drawn toward such as manifest it. And where there is much of the Spirit of God, there will be no bitterness against any of the truths of his word. Thus it is that truth is communicated from the spiritual to the spiritual; for the "Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," and truth is "spiritually discerned."

What we need, then, is to live so near to God as to have the constant and manifest presence of God with us—lives not simply with the negative quality of being above reproach, but with the positive qualities of our divine religion. Convinced, as we are, that the coming of the Lord is at the door, let us attain to that experience and be filled with that enthusiasm which such a faith should inspire; so shall men see our good works, and be won to that faith from which they spring.—Herald of Life.

HIGHER.

IDA AHLBORN.

Higher, higher, thus my soul doth cry;
Like bird panting to be free,
Longs my soul, oh! God, for thee;
But the streams of wrong desire
Quench the holy, heavenly fire;
Ash-o'erstrewn the embers lie.

Higher, higher, lift me from this night,
From this earthly, clinging dust,
To higher love and purer trust;
Veil of doubt rend asunder,
Show me the glory, wonder
Round thy throne of lasting light.

Higher, higher, nearer still to thee;
Lamb of God, let peace descend;
Reign of passion come to end;
Thou alone have perfect sway,
And the clouds be swept away,
By love's glory thrown on me.

SHALL YOU BE ONE?

Reader, the Bible says that few will be saved. "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Now, shall you be one? Shall you be saved?

I do entreat you to remember that salvation is the one thing needful. Health and riches and titles are not needful things. A man may gain heaven without them. But what shall a man do who dies not saved? Oh, that you would see that you must have salvation now, in this present life, and lay hold upon it for your own soul. Oh, that you would see that saved or not saved is the grand question in religion. High church or low church, churchman or dissenter, all these are trifling questions in comparison.

Reader, if you are not one of the few already, strive to be one without delay. I know not what you are, but I say boldly, come to Christ, and you shall be saved. The gate that leads to life may be strait, but it was wide enough to admit Manasseh and Saul of Tarsus; and why not you? The way that leads to life may be narrow, but it is marked by the footsteps of thousands of sinners like yourself. They all have found it a good way. They all have persevered, and got safe home at last. Jesus Christ invites you. The promises of the gospel encourage you. Oh, reader, strive to enter in without delay.

Reader, if you are doubtful whether you are of the few, make sure work at once, and be doubtful no more. Leave no stone unturned in order to ascertain your own spiritual state. Be not content with vague hopes and trusts. Rest not on warm feelings and temporary desires after God. Give diligence to make your calling and election sure. Oh, give me leave to say that if you are content to live on uncertain about salvation, you live the maddest life in the world.

Reader, remember. Few will be saved. Jesus says so in the Bible. Shall you be one?—J. C. Kyle.

A SHORT CLASH OF ARMS.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Spiritualism is a sign of the last days, and in these times christians need to put on the whole armor of God, to stand against the wiles of the devil. Spiritualism is brought to view in Rev. 16, under the figure of a frog-like spirit; and it resembles frogs because it is amphibious. A frog can live in clear spring water, or a muddy pool, or on dry land. Spiritualists can live in a religious meeting, in a king's palace, in a political meeting, or in a brothel.

Not long since a Spiritualist claimed that Christ was a good medium, and was answered as follows: "Yes, Christ is a medium through which God's angels and people speak to God. The counterpart, or antichrist party have their oracles or mediums, through which the fallen angels, or demons, speak to their children whose father is the devil. This system was to come in the last days, and deceive, if possible, the very elect; and your appearance in our meetings is like a wolf after sheep, and if God has a good shepherd well armed, you will go out empty."

HOME AND HEALTH.

COMFORT IN COLD WEATHER.

Forty windows in a substantial brick house built in the most thorough style, and a big furnace in the basement with red hot fire night and day; these are the antagonist forces to keep up an unrelenting fight for the mastery of cold or heat for some five or six months to come. The windows look all right and tight, but see how the folds of the curtains wave when the northwesters are lively. And the ladies who draw up close to the lights with their sewing, are fain to beat a retreat from the chilly currents of outside wind which benumbs their fingers. Why our first-class joiners cannot make joints which will keep out these shivering draughts, they perhaps know. But that they don't, plenty of people find out every winter to their cost in more ways than one. There is no highly civilized land in which families suffer so much from in-doors cold and consequent discomforts in the winter, as we who live in New England endure, in spite of the mountains of fuel we consume. The same is true of our churches and school-houses and other public resorts. We are frozen or roasted half the time, like dumb cattle who cannot help themselves, the roasting being the desperate reaction from freezing.

Now comes the weather-strip man a ringing at your door with his India-rubber contrivances to keep out the Polar zone from your cozy or elegant living rooms. You will hardly try him the second time, if you have once; for somehow the cold gets in through or under his patent, as you can feel if, on a windy day, you put your hand against that crack. It doesn't work to a charm by considerable, and is the reverse of ornamental. Perhaps we might learn something from outside of Yankee 'cuteness in this matter. Russia is a hard country to live in, but they keep warm. So they do in Canada. A friend from a more southerly latitude in our States than this, domesticated in Montreal for the coming season, writes us that the arrangements for personal comfort are quite sufficient, and that the main provision for this is in the double windows, which are universal in all well to do houses. That seems to be simple and obvious. But there is a little bit of philosophy about it, which everybody doesn't understand.

It is not merely the mechanical arrangement thus provided to lessen the cracks through which the outside air can get in; it involves a corrective principle beyond this. The comfort of a room depends chiefly upon the quality of its atmosphere as to dryness and moisture. Dry air is difficult to keep warm. There must be moisture in the room to retain heat. But with single panes of glass only to a window, the outside cold is constantly condensing the moist particles of the inside atmosphere, as any body may see in the water running down or congealing, thus taking out of its heating element; against which you vainly put on more coal and pull out the dampers. This only burns up the oxygen in the house, destroying its vitality. You get a stratum of cold air on the floor, say at about thirty-eight degrees, to chill the feet; three or four feet higher up, the thermometer will mark some sixty-five or more degrees; while at the ceiling the heat accumulates at from ninety to one hundred of Fahrenheit. It is impossible to be comfortable in such a room. The chills and the hot flushes will run up and down the flesh; all tendencies to colds, sore throats, catarrhs, rheumatisms, and nervous derangements will be aggravated, the circulation of the blood is obstructed, and general unpleasantness upsets the whole vital economy.

That will be the condition of thousands of our better class of households this winter, as it has been since the incoming of hot air furnaces. The double window plan is its most effective cure. The open space between the two sets of sash is a partial non-conductor of the heat from the inside and of cold from without. The loss of moisture from the atmosphere within is stopped. Thus the heating capacity of the rooms is increased to the great saving of fuel. More healthy and comfortable atmospheric conditions are secured with much less cost. It is so in northern Europe and Canada. The lower temperature in which their people enjoy the winter life, with its moisture and evenness of distribution, requires but a small amount of fuel compared with our lavish expenditure to get up our high and dry heat. Neither is it necessary to imprison the impurities of apartments occupied; for a simple arrangement of slightly heated flues could easily be made to carry off such vapors. The expense of making these windows would be something; but competent witnesses say that this would be saved in the economising of fuel in a couple of winters at the farthest.—Selected by Hiram Munger.

EXTREMES IN DRESS.

It is a notorious fact which has been noticed by all, that the American ladies wear richer dresses in the street than either the French, German, or English ladies do for carriage toilette. We have frequently seen English ladies of high rank—especially the princess Mary, in the plainest of silk dresses, while the princess Alice, attired in a charming merino, which showed her beautiful form to perfection, habitually tripped along the street attended only by a single maid. Undoubtedly over-dressing is vulgar, especially in women, for the glare of the sun-lit and eye-lit street. Toilettes even when tasteful as to color and style denote, if habitually rich and showy, mental vulgarity, their transparent design being, by superficial, material means, to impress the beholder. The refined beholder is unfavorably impressed, suspecting such outward richness to be a mask of inward poverty.

A prevalent fashion of costly dressing is a sign of general vulgarity. The finest type of ladyhood would recoil offended from her mirror at seeing herself besilked and befeathered and bejeweled, for a morning walk or drive. She will be simply elegant in her attire, indoors or out, as in her manners, and will not exhibit in one or the other, the slightest effort to outvie her neighbors.—Banner of Holiness.

TEMPER AND HEALTH.—Good temper with many people is dependent upon health; good health upon good digestion; good digestion upon wholesome, well-prepared food, eaten in peace and pleasantness. Ill-cooked, untidy meals are as great a cause of bad temper as many a moral wrong; and a person of sensitive physique may be nursed into settled hypochondria by living in close rooms, where the sweet fresh air and sunshine are determinedly shut out, and the foul air as determinedly shut in.

CURE FOR A FELON.—Take a tablespoonful of fine salt, a tablespoonful of black pepper, a tablespoonful of vinegar, and the yolk of an egg; simmer together, and bind on. Renew twice a day.

COME THOU INTO THE ARK.

"And the Lord said unto Noah, Come thou and all thy house into the ark."—GEN. 7: 1.

See! the heavens are gathering darkness,
Thunders roll along the sky;
Sinner, hark!
God is faithful to his threatening,
Now the hour of doom is nigh;
Come into the ark.

Muttering drops already falling,
Tell you that the storm is near;
Sinner, hark!
Does yon livid cloud awaken
In your guilty soul no fear?
Come into the ark!

God's own wrath shall pour the waters,
Where his love was long despised;
Sinner, hark!
Broken deeps already heaving
Send their floods o'er lands surprised.
Come into the ark!

Soon, in place of love and mercy,
Vengeance shall its torrents pour;
Sinner, hark!
God himself shall shut the door
On your soul forevermore.
Come into the ark! —Sel.

JESUS AND THE RESURRECTION.

J. R SMITH.

When Jesus was upon the earth, he demonstrated his power in raising the dead to life again, which caused the unbelieving Jews to marvel greatly thereat; but said he, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." If the dead are not "in the graves," but in heaven, as is commonly taught by modern theology, then the declaration of Jesus Christ is untrue; for both assertions cannot be correct. There is no portion of the living Word of God that is so much abused as that relating to the resurrection; and that, too, by some who profess to believe the record that which God has given of his Son. These become offended at the plain teachings of Jesus, and stand up in public and declare that "Jesus Christ will never come to this earth again personally"; that "all the second coming of Christ there ever will be, they have got in their hearts"; and thus deny the plain and positive testimony of "Him who spake as never man spake." Jesus Christ has said, "I will come again." The Revelator has also said, "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him."

The personal coming of Christ is the hope of the church; it ever has been, and it ever will be. The prophets, the apostles, and the martyrs all through the long, dark ages of persecution, looked forward to the day when the Deliverer would come again; even suffering themselves to be cruelly tortured, "not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection." The doctrine of the resurrection was as unpopular in Paul's day as it is now. Men denied the power of God, and the resurrection of the dead; they do the same to-day, and their unbelief will come up in condemnation against them in the last day for rejecting the Word of God. But the apostles were fearless men of God, who never shunned to declare his whole counsel, and contended earnestly for "the faith once delivered unto the saints." Raised up and commissioned by the Holy Ghost, they went about daily from house to house, preaching "Jesus and the resurrection." The two themes always went together.

Yes, God's "dead men shall live," for so says the prophet; "together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust." How comforting to my heart are the words of the prophet. I have loved ones whom I have laid away; they are sleeping in their cold dusty beds, and when Jesus, the Life-giver, comes to complete the great plan of redemption, they will "awake and sing." They cannot sing now, for "the dead praise not the Lord." Their tongues are now silent in the bondage of death; but when Jesus comes to call them from their slumbers, in a nobler, sweeter song, they will sing his power to save, when their poor lisping, stammering tongues are ransomed from the grave. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Angelic messengers witnessed their last sad funeral rites, and in the resurrection morning they will wend their way to their graves and escort them to their Eden home. The seed that was "sown in weakness" will then "be raised in power." The same body that was brought low by death, and humbled in the dust, shall then be exalted "to inherit the land." It shall then be made immortal, and shine forth in the image and glory of Christ. Then the saints can die no more. The bands of death shall loose their grasp, and the sleeping captives shall go free.

Dear mourning hearts, "refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again [not from heaven] from the land of the enemy." Rachel will then greet her babes, and fold them in her fond embrace.. Our loved ones are now held captives in the enemy's land, but we have the cheering promise that they shall soon return from their cold, dusty beds, where they have so long unconsciously lain and so silently slumbered, and "they shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Old ocean shall roll back her briny waves, and "the sea shall give up the dead." And then shall be heard a song of triumph which the angels cannot sing. And then their blessed home on earth made new,—a home where violence shall no more be heard; neither wasting nor destruction within her borders;—a home where the sun shall no more go down, neither shall the moon withdraw herself; but the Lord shall be its everlasting light, and the days of mourning shall be ended;—a home where "the people shall be all righteous," and "shall inherit the land forever."

New Bedford, Mass.

THANKSGIVING.

WM. SHEPHERD.

The feeling of gratitude has a place more or less in every human heart, and is brought into exercise and developed from various circumstances, as on the occasion of favors bestowed, or gifts conferred. For example, Paul, referring to God's incomparable love in sending his Son into the world as a sacrifice and offering for us, says: "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

Some persons manifest this sentiment in a large degree openly, while others who may feel equally as grateful on the reception of gifts are of that peculiar temperament which forbids their expressing their feelings in the same manner. This may be aptly illustrated in the case of a poor German, when describing to me his misfortune on having his barn burned down and losing his horse, etc. He said he felt wretched, and cried to see it go, but no body saw him cry, "because," said he, "I cried in my heart." Now this is the way some people cherish gratitude toward their benefactors,—in their hearts,—and do not so openly express it as others.

There is no class of mankind that has so much occasion for the exercise of this sentiment as the children of God. If any should live a life of praise and thanksgiving to God, certainly christians should,—those who have the promise of the life which now is, and also that which is to come. In view of the great love of God toward us, that we should be called the sons of God; of the exceeding great and precious promises contained in his Word; of that eternal weight of glory that God has in reserve for us; that eternity of joy, of wealth, of unutterable felicity, which will finally be realized by every faithful one,—is it not enough to fill the heart and thrill the soul with emotions of the deepest gratitude and highest praise and thanksgiving to the munificent Giver of all good? Is it not enough to urge us, with the holy David, to "take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."

There is no feature of the divine service more acceptable to God than that of thanksgiving. Under the old dispensation we find that a certain class of the Israelites were specially appointed for this very purpose, to give thanks and praise the name of the Lord. Neh. 12: 31, 40. How much we read in the Psalms in regard to the propriety of being thus engaged; and how frequently David calls upon us to give full and free utterance to this sentiment: "Offer unto God thanksgiving." The entire book of the Psalms may be said to be one perfect and harmonious expression of gratitude, prayer, praise and thanksgiving to God.

The new age of millennial blessedness on earth, which might be called God's thanks giving day, in contradistinction to man's, we find is introduced with a chorus of loud acclamations of—"Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God forever and ever." Rev. 7: 12. And again the saints are described as falling on their faces and worshiping God, saying, "We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned." Rev. 11: 16, 17. The specific cause of this offering of praise and thanksgiving to God by the elders is the fact that the eventful hour has arrived when the resumption of governmental power on earth by the Lord takes place; that is, that power which was conferred upon man in the ruling of earthly kingdoms, first given to the monarch of Babylon, and so handed down from one to another, and exercised by man among men until this important point—"the fulness [or completion] of the Gentiles," is now taken from man; all the ruling monarchs are stripped of their power, and God takes it to himself again, to have it exercised through his Son, who is to reign upon the earth, when he shall rule from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth. And this is why the "nations" are represented as being "angry," because they clearly see the time of their rule and kingdom has terminated, and that God now resumes the reins of government among men; as he "hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained."

This will then be a great thanksgiving day to God's people. It will not be celebrated by an unhappy and strange mingling of vice and virtue, of sighs and songs, of groans and laughter, of smiles and tears, of poverty and plenty, of starvation and gluttony, of misery and comfort, of degradation and honor, of shame and respectability, of falsehood and truth, by sinner and professed saint; but it will be celebrated by one people, the good of all ages, by every virtuous act which the occasion may call for, and by the unmingled songs of praise and adoration, and pœans of gratitude and thanksgiving to God and the Lamb; when a table will be spread, freighted with the choicest viands, and the richest bounties that heaven can afford and God in his munificence can bestow to feast his saints, as it is said in Ps. 36: 8, "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house, and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures." The Savior also says—"I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." Then this is Christ's table, and doubtless he will spread it with all that may be necessary to contribute to the perfect happiness and comfort of his saints. This is the feast that God has promised to prepare on the mountain of his holiness for his waiting ones. "In this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow." Isa. 25: 6. This is in connection with the resurrection of the sainted dead, when God shall rend the vail away that hides the nations now, and the covering that is cast over all people, and swallow up death in victory, and wipe away all tears, and the rebuke of his people be taken from off all the earth. To this time Paul alludes when he expresses his unbounded gratitude to God in anticipation of that day—"Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 15: 57.

This is the nuptial day in which the marriage supper of the Lamb will be partaken of, which is introduced with loud hallelujahs, as John says—"And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God." Rev. 19: 6–9. May that blessed era soon come. And may God in his mercy and rich grace prepare us to participate in that celestial feast and thanksgiving day. Amen.

HE COMES.

T. S SCOVILLE.

The great destructions spoken of by our Lord to his disciples were plainly those of Jerusalem and the end of the age (or, as some people call it, the end of the world). Both were asked about in connection, and both answered in the same way. "When shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Here the disciples ask, When will Jerusalem be destroyed, and these stones be thrown down, as you have foretold? and when will you come again? and when will be the end of the world? or what signs will foretell us of these events? It is evident those men had all these things confused and jumbled together in their own minds, and asked the question as they understood it. Our blessed Savior answered them fully, covering every point raised by the question, referring his answer both to the destruction of Jerusalem, his appearing again, and the end of time, or the age.

He tells them not to be mistaken about it, for there will be many deceptions on the way. First, many shall pretend to be Christs, and deceive all they can, which was true before Jerusalem was destroyed. It is also true in these latter days. The next sign was wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, of which the world has ever had a supply, but before the Jewish nation was broken up there were a multitude of those things transpiring; and so it is again to-day. Every daily newspaper is filled with accounts of wars, rumors of wars, famines, and pestilences. Earthquakes are occurring all over the world, and God is shaking up all nations to let them know that the time is short.

Persecutions too were common before Jerusalem was destroyed, and we see to-day the line is drawn strongly between christian and sinner, and even between christian and professor. There is not much bloodshed just now, perhaps, but if any man believes there is no persecution in our day, let him believe and preach the doctrine of the soon coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead, and see how quickly the cold shoulder will be turned on him, even by professors of religion. See how quickly the sneer will reach him, and he be called a fanatic, enthusiast, fool, lunatic, all of which will hurt any man. See how quickly the teacher and preacher of righteousness, who leads the meeting, will watch him, and just as he is about to rise and say a word for his Master, the good man says, "Sing a hymn," or he asks another brother to close by prayer.

In the business world also there is the same coldness and turning away, and a man is shunned because he will not be a low politician, because he will not work for and with a church instead of for and with Christ. In fact, if a man does not become one with the men about him in all their follies, he is set at naught. And how can a real believer in the soon coming of the Lord go with such people? What did Jesus say? Ye are "as sheep in the midst of wolves." Where is the language that could put the case more strongly? A sheep amid wolves means to be in danger of being bitten and devoured. I would like to open a view of the great sea of persecution to which we are drifting, but must leave that to another time.

There is a double fulfillment of many prophecies, and we can plainly see that in answering the questions asked him, our Lord could hardly describe one scene without describing the other, for the same events must occur in both. "Deliver you up to be afflicted," "hated of all nations," "betray one another, and shall hate one another." This is the hardest of all. "False prophets shall arise"; "iniquity shall abound"; "the love of many shall wax cold," and this gospel of my kingdom shall be first preached. All these were signs then, and are equally signs now. And we are drifting into more marked scenes of the same kind in these days on a grander and more extended scale than was true in his day.

All the signs forerunning the coming of Christ are now fulfilled except one, which is the destruction of the Turkish government. See Rev. 16. The fifth vial was poured upon the beast, the Roman government; the sixth is poured upon the Turkish government. The next event is modern Spiritualism, and then the world's great event—He comes! he comes! "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

BACKSLIDING.

I. I. LESLIE.

The wanderer from Christ is the most unhappy of all beings. There is no peace to "backsliders in heart." That they will be "filled with their own ways," is a declaration of God. While they may not now be filled with the consequences of their departure from God, they are in a condition that precludes all true happiness, and causes sorrow of heart continually.

Never was there a time when there were so many backsliders in the church as today. Though the whole nation of Israel turned away from God, and did backslide from him, yet the number then was small when compared with that now found over the entire world. It is a day of general backsliding; and there is not perhaps the exception of an individual church in the land. A universal turning away from the commands of Christ, and a consequent loss of the Spirit of God, is everywhere beheld.

Can we, as a body, say that we are an exception to all others in this great backsliding? Never, it seems to me, did a people backslide faster than we. Thirty years have witnessed a decline of spirituality among us that is most alarming. I have thought that during this time, we have passed over more retrogression than any other class of professing christians, as we were once in advance of all other bodies in relation to our obedience to God. That, as a people, we have not advanced in purity and holiness, is most surely true; and while there has been a continual increase of light and knowledge among us, there has not been a corresponding growth in grace and vital godliness. On the part of the body there is not that preparation for the coming of Christ there was thirty-five years ago, and since.

Think of it, my brethren: the only class of people on the earth looking for the Lord, backsliding while they are expecting him!—loving the world and conforming to it, when they are professedly looking for the immediate passing away of everything connected with this earth! Is not this most strange? and an inconsistency as great as that found among any other class of professing christians? Let us awake to our real condition, and not be deceived.

Our salvation as a body, and as individuals, depends upon our understanding our true position. If we have not backslidden, we should know it and rejoice; and if we have backslidden, we should certainly come to a knowledge of it, repent and return from our wanderings to Him whose arms are ever outstretched to receive us. Backslider, return to Christ.

TRUE WAITING FOR THE LORD'S COMING.

If we really held Second Advent truth in the full power of the Holy Ghost, I believe our testimony would go forth with mighty energy throughout the land. If those of us who have obtained pardon of our sins through the precious blood of Christ, possessed that deep spiritual realization of his speedy coming which we should do, there would be a mighty awakening of the church of God. We shall do well to give more diligent and prayerful heed to the sure word of prophecy which is as a light shining in a dark place.

There is one subject to which I wish to call your attention. We have in the book of Revelation two contrasted pictures of a false bride and a true bride. Rev. 17: and 12. One is the woman arrayed in purple and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls—a counterfeit bride, professing to belong to Jesus, but in reality sold to the world, having the outward appearance of religiousness, but with her heart set upon earthly riches and enjoyment, and worldly grandeur. The other is a woman clothed with the sun, and with the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars—the true Bride of Christ, heavenly in her appearance and character, and with her affections set on things above and not on things on the earth.

Now without entering into the strictly prophetic meaning of these emblems, may we not in a general sense regard them as apt representatives on the one hand, of mere worldly, carnally-minded professors of Christianity who have the form of godliness but deny the power thereof; lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God: and on the other hand, of those true christians, whose hopes are heavenly, and who can say like St. Paul, "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body"? Phil. 3: 20, 21.

Now let every one settle in their own mind, as in the sight of God, which of these two classes of christians they belong to, and whether they can truly say of themselves, "Our conversation is in heaven." Remember that this is an intensely practical matter. If we truly believe in the resurrection and ascension of Christ, and in his intercession for us at God's right hand as our personal Savior, and if our affections are fixed upon him, the desire of our hearts will naturally be visibly to behold him whom our soul loveth; especially as he hath told us that he is coming back again to receive us to himself, that where he is, there we may be also. John 14: 3. In such case we shall feel that we are pilgrims and strangers on this earth, having here no continuing city, but seeking for one which is to come. I have often refused to give out to be sung by a general audience that hymn, "I'm but a stranger here, heaven is my home." I have felt that it was a mockery for those words to be sung by persons who were wholly absorbed in the affairs of this life, and had little or no heart or disposition for the work of the Lord.

Is there not a lesson taught us in the prophetic parable of the Ten Virgins in Matt. 25: 1–10? They are represented as at first all going forth to meet the Bridegroom in expectation of his advent. All of them are therefore in some sense believers in his second coming, yet they afterwards slumber and sleep; and in the end only half of them are found ready to enter into the marriage when the Bridegroom comes. There is then the solemn fact that even the foolish virgins, who will be shut out, once professed to wait for the Bridegroom.

Let me ask you, Have you turned to God from idols (including among the rest, covetousness, which is idolatry) to serve the living and true God? and are you, in the power of the Holy Ghost, waiting for his Son from heaven? 1 Thess. 1: 10. If so, your heart will not be seeking for or fixed upon an earthly resting-place; but you will have the Spirit of the Bride who is not satisfied with anything but the Bridegroom; and you will be like the Thessalonians, who received the gospel, "not in word only, but also in power and the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." 1 Thess. 1.—Lord Radstock.—Messiah's Herald.

JESUS.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus."—MATT. 1: 21.

The sweetest name there is in earth or in heaven, the song of infant lips, and the music of hoary headed saints. From one end of the earth to the other, among all nations, in different languages, by sick and poor, in gorgeous synagogues, in plain chapels, in tented groves, in home circles, in the city, in the country, by the roadside, in the desert, on the mountains, in the valleys, by the seaside, in bethels, on the ocean, everywhere the world around, wherever there are human beings who have heard of this name—the name of Jesus—there are songs, and hymns of praise and thanksgiving. Jesus, the babe of Bethlehem, is the king of the world. Though he has not yet assumed his visible, personal, universal reign, still he reigns by his Spirit in thousands of loyal, loving, devoted hearts.

Jesus is loved because he is lovely. Who ever heard anything bad about Jesus? He was a pure, blessed, holy child. No sin ever stained his conscience or defiled his heart. He never did anything wrong. He was always good, and his Father, with a voice from heaven, could say, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." Who has language to describe his excellencies, or an imagination to picture his love? The inspired prophet, while gazing on his future loveliness, and unparalleled magnificence, exclaimed with overwhelming admiration and astonishment, "His name shall be called Wonderful." If we look with wonder to see a boy rising from deep obscurity, and by his own integrity and ability gradually gaining confidence, and ascending to the highest summit of human honor, how much greater must be our wonder to see the "babe of Bethlehem" rising to a seat at his Father's right hand, and ruling the world with his gospel. O, there never was such a being as Jesus. The story of his love has conquered many rebellious hearts, and brought tears from eyes unused to weep. The sound of his name has sent a gleam of sunlight into the darkest corners of earth, cheering and gladdening the wilderness, causing it to blossom as a beautiful garden.

What hope there is in this name to the convicted sinner. Jesus. That means Savior. His name indicates his character. He came to save, to seek and to save the lost. He forgave sins when he was here. He bound up broken hearts. He comforted the mourners. Sinners thronged to hear the loving words that fell from his lips. He was a wonderful teacher, and a wonderful Savior, for he could save the hardest cases. To the penitent he said, "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace, and sin no more." What comfort in this name to the dying saint. Think of the sailor boy wrecked on yonder rocky coast. He is cold, naked, hungry, dying far, far away from home among strangers, or alone in the sand on the seabeat shore. O, how he thinks of home, and wishes that he could see mother, or sister, or brother, to hear from them some comforting word. But no mother is there to soothe his sorrow, or sister, to kiss his cheek; no brother to lift his aching head, and to bid him a kind farewell. He must die alone. No, not alone. Jesus is there. O, how sweet is the name of Jesus then! What comfort to feel that he is near to him.

A captain was once crossing the ocean. On the voyage he discovered something in the distance floating. Drawing near to it, he found it was a woman who had escaped from a wreck, and was drifting on a piece of board. As she was tossed up and down on the waves, she was heard singing this beautiful hymn,

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly;
While the raging billows roll,
While the tempest still is high."

IMMATERIALITY.

Immateriality is but another name for nonentity. It is the negative of all things and beings, of all existence. There is not one particle of proof that can be advanced to establish it. It has no way to manifest itself to any intelligence in heaven or on earth. Neither angels, nor men, could possibly conceive of such a substance, being, or thing. It possesses no property or power by which to make itself manifest to any intelligent being in the universe. Reason and analogy never scan it, or even conceive of it. Revelation never reveals it, nor do any of our senses witness its existence. It cannot be felt, heard, tasted, or smelled, even by the strongest organs, or the most acute sensibilities. It is neither liquid nor solid, soft nor hard; it can neither extend nor contract. In short, it can exert no influence whatever; it can neither act nor be acted upon. And even if it does exist, it can be of no possible use. It possesses no desirable property, faculty or use, yet, strange to say, immateriality is the modern christians' God, his anticipated heaven, his immortal self—his all.

O sectarianism! O atheism! O annihilation! Who can perceive the nice shades of difference between the one and the other? They seem alike all but in name. The atheist has no God. The sectarian has a God without body or parts. Who can define the difference? For our part, we do not perceive a difference of a single hair. They both claim to be the negative of all things which exist, and both are equally powerless and unknown. The atheist has no other life or conscious existence beyond the grave. The sectarian has one, but it is immaterial, like his God, and without body or parts. Here again both are negative, and both arrive at the same point. Their faith and hope amount to the same, only it is expressed by different terms.

Again, the atheist has no heaven in eternity. The sectarian has one, but it is immaterial in all its properties, and is therefore the negative of all riches and substances. Here again they are equal, and arrive at the same point. As we do not envy them the possession of all they claim, we will now leave them in the quiet and undisturbed enjoyment of the same, and proceed to examine the portion still left for the despised materialist to enjoy.

What is God? He is a material, organized intelligence, possessing both body and parts. He is in the form of man, and is a model, or standard of perfection to which man is destined to attain, He being the great Father and Head of the family.

What is Jesus Christ? He is the Son of God, and is every way like his Father, being the "the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person.' He is a material intelligence, with body, parts, and passions, possessing immortal flesh and immortal bones.

What are men? They are the offspring of Adam. They are capable of receiving intelligence and exaltation to such a degree as to be raised from the dead with a body like that of Jesus Christ, and to possess immortal flesh and bones. Thus perfected, will possess the earth as their "everlasting inheritance." With these hopes and prospects before us, we say to the Christian world who hold to immateriality, that they are welcome to their God, their life, their heaven, and their all. They claim nothing but that which we throw away. Therefore, there is no ground for quarrel or contention between us.

We choose all substance—what remains,
The mystical sectarian gains;
All that each claims each shall possess,
Nor grudge each other's happiness.
We claim the earth, the air, and sky,
And all the starry worlds on high;
Gold, silver, ore, and precious stones,
And bodies made of flesh and bones.
An immaterial God they choose,
An immaterial heaven and hell;
For such a God we have no use,
In such a heaven we cannot dwell.
Our God, like us, can hear and see,
Feel, taste, and smell eternally;
Immortal brain through which to think,
Organs to speak, and eat, and drink.
Such is our God, our heaven, our all,
When once redeemed from Adam's fall;
All things are ours, and we shall be
The Lord's to all eternity.

—Selected by J. C. Smith.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

See that your religion be purely divine, and that first upon thy soul, and then upon all that thou hast, there be written, 'Holiness to the Lord!'

To be holy is to be devoted to God, and given over entirely to his use. Our hearts and lives must not, therefore, be 'common or unclean.' To live a holy life is transcendently above all success in money-making, and all perfection in the sciences and the arts. To whatever extent God's Spirit is upon us and in us, so much our present condition is more excellent than the highest worldly good can advance us to. To the true believer, God should be the first and last, and the all in all. Our whole life should be swallowed up in God. When we awake in the morning, our first thoughts should be of God, and our meditations of him should be sweet. Whatever we do, we should do all to the glory of God. In the various activities of life, we must be able at all times to say, I do this, or I do that, because it is his will. I do it to please God; to glorify him and enjoy him.

O reader, can you take God for your owner, your Sovereign, your Savior, your portion, your all? If not, you fail to be a godly man. If his authority have not more power upon you than the authority of the greatest upon earth, you are 'none of his,' whatever you may pretend. But if 'holiness to the Lord,' be written upon you, and upon all that is yours, you are devoted to him, and you are truly a child of God. Slavery to the flesh, the world, and the devil, is the mark that is written upon the foreheads of the ungodly, and Satan, the world, and the flesh have the services of such. But if you are consecrated to God, and are bearing his name and mark upon you, let all mankind know that you are his, that you are resolved to live to him, and to trust him. Let God be the very life of you, the beginning and the end of all you are or do."—Richard Baxter, 1675.—Christian Standard.

THE TITLE "REVEREND."

We can not lay down the pen without asking why so many brethren still retain the title of Reverend. We are willing to reverence the aged pastor, and we did not hesitate to give that title to our beloved friend George Rogers, just in the same way as we use the term "the venerable Bede," or "the judicious Hooker;" but we are not prepared to reverence every stripling who ascends the pulpit; and moreover, if we thought it due to others to call them reverend, we should still want some reason for their calling themselves so. It seems rather odd to us that a man should print upon his visiting card the fact that he is a reverend person. Why does he not occasionally vary the term, and call himself estimable, amiable, talented or beloved? Would this seem odd? Is there any valid objection to such a use of adjectives after the fashion is once set by employing the word reverend? If a man were to assume the title of reverend for the first time in history, it would look ridiculous, if not presumptuous or profane. Why does not a Sunday-school teacher call himself "the respectable John Jones," or the city missionary dub himself "the hard-working William Evans?" Why do we not, like the members of secret orders and others, go in for worthy masterships and past grands and the like?

We reply, that we do not care for such honors, and are content to leave them to men of the world, or to the use of those who think they can do some good thereby. It may be said that the title of reverend is only one of courtesy, but then, so was the title of Rabbi among the Jews, yet the disciples were not to be called Rabbi. It is, at any rate, a suspicious circumstance that among mankind no class of persons should so commonly describe themselves by a pretentious title as the professed ministers of the lowly Jesus.

Peter and Paul were right reverend men, but they would have been the last to have called themselves so. No sensible person reverences us one jot the more because we assnme the title. It certainly is in some cases a flagrant misnomer, and its main use seems to be the pestilent one of keeping up the unscriptural distinction of clergy and laity. A lad, fresh from the college, who has just been placed in a pulpit, is the reverend Smith, while his eminently godly grandfather, who has for fifty years walked with God, and is now ripe for heaven, has no such claim to reverence.

A gentleman of ability, education and eminent piety preaches in various places with much zeal and abundant success, but he is no reverend; while a man of meagre gifts, whose principle success seems to lie in scattering the flock, wears the priestly prefix, having a name to be reverenced when he commands no esteem whatever. This may be a trifle; many, no doubt, so regard it; why, then, are they not prepared to abstain from it? The less value of the epithet, the less reason for continuing the use of it. It would be hard to say who has a right to it, for many use it who have not been pastors for years, and have not preached a sermon for many a day; what on earth are they to be reverenced for?

Other men are always preaching, and yet no one calls them reverend, but why not? The distribution of this wonderfnl honor is not fairly arranged. We suggest that, as the wife is to see that she reverences her husband, every married man has a degree of claim to the title of Rev., and the sooner all benedicts exercise the privilege, the sooner will the present clerical use of it pass out of fashion. We wonder when men first sought out this invention, and from whose original mind did the original sin emanate. We suspect that he lived in the Roman Row of Vanity Fair, although the Rev. John Bunyan does not mention him. One thing is pretty certain, he did not flourish in the days of Rev. Paul, or the Rev. Appllos, or the Rev. Cephas.—Spurgeon.

EXPECTATION IN GOD.—The less we expect from this world the better for us. The less we expect from our fellow-men, whether of spiritual help or inspiring example, the smaller will be our disappointment. He that leans on his own strength, leans on a broken reed. We are always going to be something stronger, purer, and holier. Some where in the future there always hangs a golden ideal of higher life that we are going to reach; but as we move on, the dream of better things moves on before also. It is like the child's running over the hill to catch the rainbow which is as far off as ever. Thus does our day-dream of a higher life keep floating away from us, and we are left to realize what frail, unreliable creatures we are, when we rest on expectations of growth and victory over evil in ourselves. Christ alone can give victory.

THE CLOSING YEAR.

Time's onward, resistless march, has brought us to the closing scenes of another year. It has been one of many marked and startling events, which have resulted in the destruction of many lives and much property. Floods upon floods have turned prosperity into wide-spread ruin, leaving only heaps of desolation, instead of pleasant homes. The devouring flames have not been idle during the year, but have turned to ashes a vast amount of property. Wealthy men have lost their riches, and stepped down among the common people, being in a safer position, perhaps, than when living in luxury. Change is every where. In this life all is uncertain. To-morrow is wisely hidden from our view. The man who has learned to make a right use of the present moment has entered the way of abounding comfort and contentment. His life flows sweetly, and his cup is filled with heavenly peace. His sunny life sheds forth a pleasing radiance to illumine the pathway of those who keep him company.

During the present year death has not been idle, but has carried the cup of sorrow into many families, and left them clothed in sable garments, weeping at the graves of loved ones. No respect of persons has been shown by this relentless visitor. Without permission, he has chosen his own time to call, and has separated the warmest friends as freely as the bitterest enemies. The empty chair at the fire-side and table tell the story of his sad work. Parents and children, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, and other loved and loving ones, have felt his icy hands grasping their heart-strings, and they have been compelled to say farewell while faintly grasping some friendly hand, and receiving the last fond embrace and kiss of love, as their eyes grew dim, and earthly scenes faded from their vision. To all entreaties to stay away, he ever responds, I shall call again soon. The time is at hand when this "last enemy" shall be destroyed, and cause no more mourning. Then will all his victims, redeemed by Him who is "mighty to save," escape from their chilly chains to greet each other again, where the parting hand is never given, and the farewell word is never spoken. The weary watcher may expect soon to see the morning light of heavenly glory. The night of weeping is almost past. Cheer up, lonely pilgrim. The day-star is rising. Zion's King will soon appear to wipe away thy tears, and give again to thy embrace the loved ones, now sleeping in the lonely grave. Let us be ready to hail with joy the glad day, and to crown our Jesus Lord of all for evermore. M. G.

ONTARIO.—The meetings in Ontario continued to increase in interest every day up to the present time, Dec. 13th, the time of our departure. Last evening, more came than could get into the house. Some fifteen found peace in Christ last week, and many more are almost persuaded to be christians. We have rarely seen such glorious results the first week of a series of meetings. The blessings received have already paid richly for the sacrifice made in building the new church. Strong men, and leading citizens are submitting to Jesus, and seeking salvation at his hands. The revival tide is rising rapidly, and those who had lost all interest in religious matters are now seen in the inquiry meetings. The pastor, Bro. J. E. Wells, and Bro. P. B. Stevens, will unite in continuing this excellent work. M. G.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

The Advent Christian Association, according to notice, met in convention at Worcester, Mass., Dec. 14th, to consider the expediency of a revision of its Constitution, principally for the purpose of giving all who have an interest in the management of its important business, ecclesiastical and financial, a more equal and practicable representation. The principal design was to give those most remotely located from the place of holding its meetings a better and less expensive way of being equally represented with those located more contiguously with the place of meeting. That object could only be accomplished by reducing the number of representatives, so as to make it practicable for all to be equally represented.

Any rule of association, which does not give all a privilege of enjoying the same advantages, is not equal and just; therefore, to give any class the right to a larger representation than others can produce, without being subjected to an unreasonable burden, is not only unequal but oppressive. To give one State the privilege of sending twenty representatives at an expense of $200, and another State the privilege of sending one representative at the same expense, is giving one twenty fold advantage over the other. When the expense of a representive body is paid by the body, then it is equalized in this respect; but as the Association does not pay the expenses of its representatives, neither could it have done so in any year in the past, with all the funds it received for all purposes, if all had been represented as provided for by its Constitution, it was considered defective as to giving a just and practicable representation.

The old Constitution was so defective in its operations that we think there has never been a year when more than one sixth of those co-operating with the body have been represented at its annual meetings. To correct these unjust provisions (as some looked upon them), in the Constitution, the Convention was called. Its deliberations were conducted, we think, with a christian spirit of love and forbearance, which is seldom witnessed in these days of jealousy, under circumstances so calculated to excite strife and bitter feeling.

After the passing of the testing vote for changing the base of representation, those in the minority seemed to manifest an acquiescence in the decision of the large majority, which indicated that a christian spirit prevailed instead of a factious spirit, which gave all great hope that in our future associations greater harmony and fellowship may prevail.

All human society is now passing into that state in which it will be dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel. Faction and strife every where exist, except among true christians, where the spirit of Christ controls. Let us cling to the Fountain of eternal love and heavenly harmony, that we may escape the wicked divisions and satanic strife now so widely developed in our sinking world. Brethren, live in peace, and the God of peace shall be with you, and bring you into the undisturbed society of all the holy in the kingdom of the Prince of Peace. J. C.

"IMPENDING CRISIS."—Under this heading the Prophetic Times says:

"The wickedness, the irreligion, the hypocrisy of the world; the secularity, the ungodliness and formality of the church are hastening on the time for the divine interposition in doing his strange work. Look at the signs of the times. The characteristics of the last days meet our vision everywhere. Iniquity abounds; formality increases; schisms prevail; and many are found 'lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.' Surely it may be said, 'It is time for thee Lord, to work; for they have made void thy law.'"

We do not see any room to doubt the foregoing statement. That the end of the present dispensation is at hand is a point which we think is most fully settled, and placed beyond the reach of uncertainty. It is glorious to be living in these last days, so near the time when we can see our dear Jesus, who died to save us from destruction. M. G.

ARE WE READY?

If we knew that the close of the present year would end this life, and bring us to the day of judgment, are we ready for the solemn event? Is there any thing to be done to fit us to meet the Lord in peace? Is the heart clean? Is it free from all hatred, pride, covetousness, lasciviousness, love of the world, and roots of bitterness; and is it filled with the Holy Spirit producing perfect love and peace, and a joyful submission to the will of the Lord in all things? If this is not the case, then there must be something lacking. Is it not time to have a thorough heart examination, in order that the evil thing may be found, and cast away at once, lest we be reckoned among the foolish virgins? Let us not step into a new year with sin upon our hearts, when there is such an abundance of mercy for all who will confess and forsake their sins. No one need to bear the burden of sin another day. The Lord is waiting to remove the load, whenever we feel sufficiently weary and heavy laden to ask for his assistance.

Have we any unsettled difficulties with any person? Let them not see the light of a new year. Let them all be corrected and buried in 1875, so that we can begin the next year with a joyful song, free from condemnation, ready any moment to meet the coming Savior with abounding rapture.

Are we indulging any bad habits? Let them die with the year. Remember, the next is the noted centennial year of American Independence. What a good time to declare our independence in relation to sin, and all bad habits, and our most determined opposition to all the ways of Satan. It is time to have a jubilee victory, in the name of Jesus. Stop now every evil habit, and let it die this year, that the new one may be entered rejoicing in the Lord, trusting in his mighty power, to be kept in the narrow way. Let every one who reads this, inquire, Have I any bad habit left? If so, here I end it, trusting in the Lord for deliverance. Let there be this year (1875) an utter end of the use of all intoxicating drinks, tobacco pipes, cigars, snuff, morphine, opium and all other evil things. Let all difficulties be settled; debts paid, or arranged in the best possible manner, so as to be ready any moment to meet Jesus. Let the work be done in the most thorough manner. We must be near the grand coronation day of the King of kings. M. G.

THE IMAGE OF GOD.

Bro. E. F. Sergisson requests that the following questions be answered through the Crisis:—

1. "What is the Bible meaning of God's moral image when applied to man?"

2. "Is this moral image an entity, which was only lent or given to man on condition of obedience, or was it an attribute of his nature, created in him as a part of his nature? If so, how could he lose it without losing a part of the man proper?"

3. "Is not the moral image of God, when applied to man, the result of a cause (not an entity or attribute), and that cause obedience? And would not this position prove the first Adam an immoral being, and Christ Jesus, our Lord, the second Adam, the only person who, in the strict sense, ever bore the moral image of God?"

An image is "an imitation, representation, or similitude of any person or thing."

The word image, represents the likeness of one being or thing to another, and is not the proper name of an entity or an attribute, and could not apply to such, only to represent its similitude or imitation of something else.

"This flag is the image of a murder done in Vienna."—Shaks.

The word image here represents the likeness of the acts in the flag to those of the murder.

"Whose is this image and superscription?"—Christ.

The word image, as used by Christ, does not represent the weight, mettle, or value of the coin, or its proper name, but only the resemblance of a figure upon it to Cæzar's face.

In the passage "Image of God," the word image does not represent God or any of his principles or attributes, but the likeness of something to God. The image of a man is not the man or any part of the man, but something that resembles the man in some particulars—form, acts, intellect, or something else. To have the image of God, is to be like God in some particular sense. This may exist in some departments, as organism, spirit, mind, acts, love and purity. These may all be expressed separately, as if the image existed in each department distinctly.

A son may be represented as the image of his father in figure, temperament and intellectual genius. The image may be perfect and distinct in each department. The son might be spoken of as an image of the father in figure, and by another, in intellect. In this case it would not be correct to say that the word image in both cases refer to the same likeness or the likeness of the same things in the son to the father. Just so it is in the Scriptures. Man is represented as bearing the image of God in his organism, and also in his heart, and life, or acts.

What, then, may we understand by the moral image of God? or, in other words, what may we understand by man's moral likeness to God? The word moral, literally means—

"Manner, custom, habit, way of life, conduct."—Webster.

It expresses the particular quality of acts as it regards right and wrong. It refers to the intentions and purposes producing the acts which characterize the conduct as virtuous or vicious.

"Keep at the last within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue."—Hooker.

"Mankind is broken loose from moral bands."—Dryden.

"A moral agent is a being capable of those actions that have a moral QUALITY, and which can properly be denominated good or evil in a moral sense."—Edwards.

Morality, as Webster says, is "The relation of conformity or non-conformity to the true, moral standard or rule; the quality of an intention, a character, an action, a principle, or a sentiment, when tried by the standard of right; the quality of an action which renders it good; the conformity of an act to the divine law or to the principles of morals." Moral character is therefore determined by the quality of acts, as right or wrong, according to the standard of God's government.

As God is the creator of all intelligent beings, he has an infinite right to determine what acts of his creatures are right, and what are wrong. Therefore the revealed law of the Creator, for the government of men, is the standard of all moral principles by which God himself is governed, thus designing to produce a harmony between himself and all his creatures.

The moral image of God in man is, therefore, a condition or state of loyalty to God's law, man being so qualified and endowed as to produce a quality of acts, as it regards the intentions and purposes producing them so much in the likeness of God's condition of faithfulness to his own laws as to make man's character for faithfulness an image of God's.

The word image, as used in the Scriptures in its primary and common usage, as applied to man, refers to his organism; but it also has a secondary meaning, as many important words do have, and in this sense it evidently applies to the heart or moral character. Paul says:—

"But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18.

The context shows that the change into this image is experienced while reading with the vail taken away, which is done when they turn from Moses to Christ, and enjoy "liberty" under the administration of the "Spirit." He says, "We all [all christians] with open face [unvailed face], beholding [not shall behold at a future time, but are now beholding] as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed [not shall be changed at the resurrection, but now, after having 'turned to the Lord,' while we are 'beholding,' 'reading' with the vail taken away], into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." The image is "from glory to glory;" that is, it progresses from one degree of glory to another.

If the image is the human organism, and applies to the resurrected body, then that body must be changed after being glorified at resurrection, so as to be more glorious. The text and context will not allow of such a construction; for the person having put on this image is exhorted not to "lie one to another," and certainly such an exhortation could not have been designed for the glorified saints in the kingdom of God.

Again, the apostle shows in what department of the man this image is found. He says—"In knowledge after [according to] the image of him that created him. It is therefore in the intellectual department that the image is found, which is the department in which moral character is formed.

Again the apostle says: "But we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18. This passage certainly applies to believers in this state, and not in the next world; and the change into the image of the Lord is a progressive one, from one degree to another, which is not in an "entity," organism, or attribute, but in "knowledge," which is increased by the Spirit of the Lord, or by its revelations and assistance in the formation of a pure, moral, or christian character.

The heart is the moral endowment of man, which is vile or pure, according to the spiritual condition of the moral elements of man, which are defiled by sin, and made pure by God, through the application of the blood of Christ. The image is in the condition of the heart, which is made pure and holy by God, and like himself.

The Psalmist says: "He fashioneth their hearts alike." Ps. 63:15. To make an image of a man would be to "fashion" something like a man. God changes all hearts alike; so that when he fashions them they are all in his own moral image, or in a state of holiness."

The Psalmist says of the Lord when he beholds the wicked, "Thou shalt despise their image." Ps. 73:20. He did not mean that the Lord despises the figure of their bodies, for they do not particularly differ from those of the righteous, but it is their hearts—their moral condition that is despised of the Lord. We must be changed into the moral image of Christ here, to secure the promise of having his physical image, or a body like his glorious body in the resurrection state.

The divine, perfect pattern is placed before us in the spirit, love, and character of Jesus Christ. Let us examine ourselves very carefully, and see if we are spiritually and morally in the image of the great Standard of divine perfection. J. C.

WAR CLOUDS.

War clouds are gathering over Eastern Europe, that threaten terrible results. The great powers are deeply interested in the Turkish question. "The sick man" is evidently dying, and can live but a short time. For many years the nations have been watching Turkey with special interest. Russia has evidently been plotting to take Constantinople, but England, France, Russia, and Austria, are very sensitive on the subject, for it is quite apparent that the power that holds Constantinople has the key to the East, and would be the lion among the nations. The prospect for Russia is flattering. Says the Chicago Journal:

"The situation in Turkey and the speech of Mr. Disraeli at the Mansion House banquet alike lend a grave color to the aspects of affairs in Eastern Europe, yet there are many good reasons for supposing that the powers will pause before entering upon a war which, if it arises, must seemingly become general and terrible. It is true, events at Constantinople indicate that the Ottoman Empire in Europe is in a state bordering upon collapse. That the Sultan should be forced to repudiate at one moment, and in the next virtually confess himself unable to overcome an insurrection in one of his Christian provinces, shows how near the verge of ruin this European dominion is. The collapse of Turkey, moreover, would unquestionably be the signal for a crisis involving every great power, and would but too probably create a rivalry for the spoils, which would end in war.

When England, through the mouth of her Prime Minister, avows her intention to take part in the policy shaping the future of the Turkish provinces, we may be sure that neither Russia, Prussia, nor Austria will remain inactive spectators. Nor is it improbable that at this moment negotiations for alliances, in view of an impending eventuality, are progressing in the secret Cabinets of the several courts.

The crisis, if it comes, is likely to find alliances on one side, and the other fully ratified and confirmed. Another untoward element in the situation is the fact that every power stands armed to the teeth. Russia and Germany, especially, are provided with stupendous armaments, and their military organizations are replete with all the accompaniments and enginery of war; while lesser powers have been forced, in so far as they were able, to follow their example, to create large armies, to adopt the most destructive weapons, to build navies, and to set fortresses and defenses in order. This being the state of affairs, the situation is no doubt one out of which war might suddenly develop."

These are times of thrilling interest to the inhabitants of this world. "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." M. G.

A CONVERSATION.

A pastor calls on a layman and says, "Dear brother, how can you believe the wicked will perish forever, after the resurrection, when the Bible is so plain in declaring that "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life"?

Layman replies, by asking what he understood by "the wages of sin" being death? The preacher replies, by saying, "I mean the death that never dies."

Layman replies, by saying, "Then you would make the text read, 'The wages of sin' is the death that never dies; and the gift of God is the eternal life that never lives."

Please make this matter plain to the readers of the Crisis. A.

When it is said, "The wages of sin is death," it is quite certain that the word "death" is used to represent the penalty for sin. In all cases, in every statute book, the Bible not excepted, whenever a penalty is expressed it is always in literal language. No exceptions are known. When it is said, "She is dead while she liveth," the word dead has no reference to the punishmemt for sin. The same is true of "let the dead bury the dead;" but whenever a term is used to express punishment, it is always literal.

The question now arises, is literal death a punishment? Certainly. It is called the "capital," or highest penalty that can be inflicted. Life is the most valuable of all things, and when lost, everything else is worthless to that individual. The gift to the righteous "is eternal life through Jesus Christ;" but the wicked lose all the righteous gain. One is an eternal gain, the other an eternal loss. The penalty for sin is eternal death. If the punishment was imprisonment, it would begin when put in prison, and continue till released. If whipping, it would commence with the first blow, and end with the last. If it was torment, it would begin with the agony, and end when it ceased. But if it were death, when would it begin? Not till the person was dead. How long would it continue? Till he came to life again. If he should remain dead eternally, how long would be his punishment? M. G.

"THE SECOND ADVENT, and its accompaniments,' is the title of an article by Dr. D. A. Whedon, in the Christian Advocate. He says:

"Our Lord will come again, really, visibly, bodily and in a cloud; 'so, in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven'—as the angels said to his disciples on the day of his ascension. St. Paul describes its manner a little further, in 1 Thess. 4:16, as with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God.' Connected with this coming is the resurrection of the dead, and the change, equivalent to that of the resurrection, in the bodies of the living. This will occur 'in a moment, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (that is the living) shall be changed.' 1 Cor. 15:52. So in 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17, immediately after the descent of the Lord 'with the trump of God' we find the two events, 'first,' the christian dead rising, 'then,' the living ascending together with them." M. G.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Dear Brn. in Christ:—Again I feel that my whole being is called out in praise to my heavenly Father for his great mercy to me. O that I could express what I feel also to my dear brethren for their beneficence, but the Lord regards it as a loan to himself. I desire to express my heartfelt thanks, not only for the pecuniary assistance rendered, but for the warm words of tender sympathy and christian love. God bless you, dear friends. I cannot repay you, but Jesus will make it all right. Your words of good cheer are as food to the hungry, and drink to the thirsty. My soul feasteth on them. Praise the Lord! Neither have I got a surfeit of the good things that come in the Crisis and Times. I thank the Editors and other writers for the rich intellectual, yes, better, Scriptural feasts provided by them from time to time.

It has been intimated by some—"Why, I guess Bro. Thomson is getting well, or better; he has an article in the paper." I will try and describe the operation I go through with to write. In the first place, I am feeling much better than usual. I take my lead pencil and commence to scribble. I cannot use a pen, as I have to write lying on my back; the ink would run out at the top of the holder. It may well be supposed that one could not write long in that position. Then my writing must be laid aside again and again, perhaps for weeks. Finally, when done, it is but a rough sketch, and my daughter takes it in hand to decipher the hieroglyphics, and copy it. So you see it is no easy task. But, oh, my dear brethren, I would gladly endure anything if I might but cheer the heart of one of Father's little ones. I see by the papers that there are many sufferers in the family. God bless you all. Jesus is soon coming, and it will be all over then. Amen.

WHAT JESUS HAS DONE.

L. B. WEAVER.

My mind for a long time has been deeply absorbed in thinking and trying to realize in some degree what Jesus has done for us, and how little we do for him in return. I am often led to cry out in the deep sorrow of my heart, because I have done so little for him, and am not worthy of having a home with him at last. Then I am comforted with his gentle whispers of love, telling me that he has bought me; that he has paid a great price for me, and that I am not my own; then gladly and willingly I fall as it were prostrate at his feet, and cry, Here, Lord, take me, poor, weary, sick, unworthy me, with nothing good about me; take me. I give myself wholly to thee, and from this time I am thine to do, to bear, or suffer all that thy righteous will may see fit to lay upon me. And I feel and know he accepts the simple offering and gives me a welcome; and I in return must do anything and everything he bids me do. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I came to him, and I found rest; for I was in trials sad and sore, and all looked dark and desolate until I heard the sweet voice of this dear, heavenly Friend, bidding me in gentle, loving tones to come to him. How glad I am that I accepted the invitation, and listened to him. When I came to him and found rest, he bade me take his yoke upon me, saying, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." When I became yoked together with Jesus, I felt I was safe, for I knew he was just the one on whom I could depend, and one that never would leave nor forsake me when trials severe should come; and if others turned coldly away from me, he would stand by me till death, then bring me from death's dominions when the last great day shall come.

If he has bought us, and we have accepted the situation, to be his, we have nothing to say as to what course he may lead us. It is his to command, ours to obey. He says, Take up thy cross, and follow me. Where I lead, you must follow. We should gladly take up the cross, denying self, bearing toil and hardships, going on whatever errands he may command. If he says, Tell the story of the cross, how I gave my life for thee, then we should gladly obey. If he says, Tell them I am coming to redeem my people, then tell the story joyfully. Pride, that great sin, must be destroyed, though it may be hard at first to crush it and keep it down.

We hear him say, Come out from the world, and be separate, not conforming to this world, but giving up the vain and foolish things of this poor and perishing world for things far more glorious and enduring. We have no right to stop and think whether it is best or not; but like true, obedient children, obey readily, though it may cost a tear or a struggle. We know that, at the end of the race, our Master has promised our reward; and we know that what he has promised he will perform; therefore we have perfect confidence in him, and whatever he bids us do or say, when he commands we will obey. He commands us to live pure, godly lives; to adorn the doctrine of our profession with a well ordered life and godly conversation; to be lights in the world; to be holy, free from sin and worldly-mindedness. Being in Jesus we shall be new creatures in everything. Old things will then have passed away, and we shall serve him in newness of life. We shall be meek, quiet, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of love and the Spirit of Jesus all the time, and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God.

My dear friends in Jesus, do be earnest in saving men and women from the fires of the last day. How much he has done for poor, lost, fallen human creatures. I wish I could express my feelings to you as I write these lines. I weep bitter tears, for I know the judgment is coming, and that the unsaved little think what an awful doom is theirs. I weep for their folly, and pray God to save all that can be saved. Do be in earnest. As I lie here, I pray and plead with God to give his servants success in bringing people to him. God help us all to do just as we shall wish we had when we have no more time to work. We are in solemn times. Jesus, help us all to keep ourselves in the love of God, and in readiness for his coming.

REPORT OF THE BEEBE PLAIN CAMPMEETING ASSOCIATION.

The meeting called through the Crisis to consider the propriety of holding an annual campmeeting at Beebe Plain, P. Q., met at the time appointed. After effecting a temporary organization, it was Voted, that a committee be raised to consider the matter before the meeting and report.

The committee reported (1), That it is expedient to purchase as much ground of Mr. Anson Beebe as is necessary for a campmeeting. (2) To secure it by bond immediately, which report was accepted and adopted.

Voted, to elect a soliciting committee to raise funds for fitting up the ground, and pledges for its purchase. The following committee were elected:—J. H. Heselton, Geo. W. Bangs, John H. Carbee, John Elliott, Charles Warren, C. L. Percival, John D. Daniels, I. K. Lombard, Lewis Bergoine, John H. Smith, Albert Chadsey, and D. N. Chadsey.*

Voted, to organize a Campmeeting Association; and L. C. McKinstry, R. W. Warner and I. K. Lombard, were elected a committee to draft a Constitution, who reported a Constitution, which was amended and adopted (See Constitution).

The following officers were then elected to fill the office until the first annual meeting: President, Elder M. A. Potter; Vice President, Dr. W. Warner; Secretary, Elder L. C. McKinstry; Treasurer, Elder C. L. Percival, Marsawiffic, P. Q.; to whom were added to fill out the quota of the Campmeeting Committee: John H. Carbee, Lewis Bergoine, and John Elliott.

Voted, thanks to the Passumpsic R. R. Company for favors rendered and offers of assistance in establishing the campmeeting; also voted thanks to the friends at Beebe Plain for use of house for meeting and entertainment.

The meeting was, without exception, the most blessed and harmonious business meeting we ever attended. All were brethren together, with, evidently, above all other considerations, an eye to the glory of God. The meeting was well attended, and there is a good promise of success for the Campmeeting enterprise. The Passumpsic R. R. Company will transport all our lumber and building material free, carry for just half fare, and give us ten per cent of all their campmeeting receipts. The friends at Beebe Plain are earnest to make the meeting a success.

The following is the Constitution of the Association:—

ART. 1. This Association shall be called The Beebe Plain Campmeeting Association.

ART. 2. The membership of this Association shall consist of all preachers and laymen in good standing among the Advent people who reside in Canada, Northern Vermont, and Northern New Hampshire, and who are in sympathy with the object of this Association;—all of whom shall be entitled to vote, and eligible to office.

ART. 3. The object of this Association shall be to hold an Annual Campmeeting at Beebe Plain, P. Q., on ground purchased of Mr. Anson Beebe, by this Association, at such a time in each year as the Campmeeting Committee may think best.

ART. 4. The grounds of this Association shall be denominated "The Beebe Plain Advent Camp-ground," and shall be owned and controlled by the Association, but may be used by other religious denominations for campmeetings and other religious meetings, by Sunday schools for conventions and associations, and by temperance organizations for conventions, mass meetings and the like, for purposes of moral reform, as in all cases the campmeeting committee may deem best; and arrange with the parties desiring to occupy them; but they shall never be used for mere pleasure—picnics, and the like—but only for such purposes as would be appropriate to any house or place of worship.

ART. 5. The officers of this Association shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer.

ART. 6. It shall be the duty of the President to preside in all meetings of the Association when present, but he may for special purposes call the Vice President to the chair, or in his absence some other member. ART. 7. It shall be the duty of the Vice President to preside in all meetings of the Association in the absence of the President, and whenever the President shall request him to do so; and he shall render the President all the assistance in his power to advance the interests of the Association.

ART. 8. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep a faithful record of all meetings of the Association, and with the advice and consent of the President to call meetings, regular and special, by a notice in the World's Crisis, to be published at least two weeks previous to the time of holding the meeting thus called. He shall also countersign all orders of the President on the Treasurer, hold all the official correspondence of the Association, draft all its documents, sign all papers relating to its business transactions, and attend to all other business pertaining to his office.

ART. 9. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive and keep all funds of the Association, until ordered by the President and Secretary to pay them to other parties; and he shall make an annual report of the condition of the treasury, with an account of the receipts and expenditures of the fiscal year, which annual report shall be made at the first annual meeting after the close of each fiscal year.

ART. 10. The officers of this Association shall be elected annually, and no officer shall hold his office longer than one year from the annual meeting at which he was elected, without re-election. Nevertheless the officers of this Association shall make their annual reports at each annual meeting subsequent to the close of their fiscal year.

ART. 11. This Association shall hold annual meetings for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business.

ART. 12. The annual meetings of this Association shall be held during the sessions of the annual campmeetings.

ART. 13. Special meetings of the Association may be held whenever the interests of the Association may demand them; such meetings being called by the Secretary with the advice and consent of the President, whenever the Executive Committee may deem advisable; and such meetings shall be regular for the transaction of business.

ART. 14. This Association shall elect annually a committee of seven, which shall be called "The Campmeeting Committee," of which four, by virtue of their office, shall be the officers of the Association, to whom three other members shall be added by election to fill up the quota of the committee.

ART. 15. The Campmeeting Committee of this Association shall have charge specially of the camp-ground and its fixtures and appurtenances, and of fitting it up for use and keeping it in repair, and shall appoint and hold each annual campmeeting; and the members of the committee shall be the trustees of the Association, holding in trust, by deed or otherwise, all property of the Association. This committee shall also be the Executive Committee of the Association, and in the intervals of the meetings of the Association shall have discretionary power, when not otherwise specially instructed, but shall always be subject to the Association, to which there shall be made annually a full report of its doings in writing, at each annual meeting subsequent to the close of their fiscal year, which report shall be made through the President.

ART. 16. Special committees may be raised as occasion requires.

ART. 17. The fiscal year of this Association shall close December the thirty-first of each year succeeding the annual campmeeting of that current year.

ART. 18. This constitution may be altered or amended by a two-thirds vote of all the members present at any regular meeting.

Adjourned after a little incidental business. L. C. McKINSTRY, Secretary.

TYRANNY IN EASTERN EUROPE.

Nothing but our great interest at this time in local politics could have caused the public to be so indifferent to the interesting historical events now going on in Eastern Europe. When "the wrongs of Poland" were before the world, or the oppression of Hungary by Austria had at length drawn forth an insurrection, there was profound sympathy here. Our public became as familiar with the skirmishes on the Theiss and the Danube, as with those of our own wars; and the "Hungarian Question" was discussed in country lyceums and lecture-rooms, from one end of the land to the other. Now a "world-historical" Empire is apparently breaking into fragments; an oppression which has weighed upon Eastern Europe for centuries is either near its end, or has caused explosions whose effects will be felt for generations, and one of the old struggles of the few and weak against the oppression of the strong has begun, with a bitterness and energy which prove its reality, and yet our public seem scarce to know anything about it.

In the course of September, the insurgents of Herzegovina put in the hands of a certain International Committee on the frontiers of Austria a statement of their wrongs, which has been widely published in Europe, and its principal points admitted to be true. There is a certain cry of agony in the appeal, as of men who have suffered up to the last point of endurance, and who now, whatever others may reply to their protests, will resist to utter destruction any further oppression, or any rule at all of their hated oppressor. The grievances sound like the wrongs of the European peasantry in the worst ages of Turkish invasion and bigotry. The Christian rayah or farmer of Herzegovina is visited by the Aga, or official of the Turkish Government, and fifty per cent. of his produce is taken. Then the Aga quarters himself with his attendants and soldiers on the unfortunate Christian peasant, and collects the tithes among his animals, which tax he quadruples at his pleasure.

Next, the unhappy farmer can be sent away for days to work on the public roads without pay or reward. In the meantime, his wife and daughters may be carried off to be converted forcibly to Islamism or to be ruined. If he resists, and offends a Turkish official, he can be struck dead, and no redress is practicable. If he complains to the courts, these are so constituted with a majority of Turkish Judges that no Christian can ever obtain a penalty against a Turk, and the complainant will very possibly be punished for prosecuting one of the "faithful." No justice exists for Christians. Their own Consuls are far away, and intimidated by the Turkish authorities. They live as did the frontier peasants of the middle ages. All the best gains of modern progress—such as security of property and person, legal taxation, representative government, freedom from oppression and tyranny by the strong—are lost by the Christian subjects of Sclavish blood in Herzegovina. Their very religion, endeared by four hundred years of Turkish insult and persecution, is scorned and contemptuously treated on every occasion. Their altars and saints, images and consecrated churches are abominations to the Turk.

It is useless to talk to these rayahs of the reforms promised by the Government at Constantinople. They know what that means. They know that true reform is not an element possible in the Turkish adminstration. They have tried that rule for four centuries, and have experienced that it never gave them one of the fruits of real government—neither security, nor order, nor law, nor liberty. It has been solely a dominion of conquests. It has been a barbarism permitted on European soil. More than that, it has been a steady persecution of the Christian religion. The sufferers under it hate it as the oppressed hate their tyrant, abhor it as an embodied persecution of the Christian faith, and, in addition, the rayahs have the deep prejudice of blood—of the Sclave against the infidel Turk. No real compromise or truce is possible. Even if Turkish arms extinguish the insurrection in blood, the wrong remains. Turkish repudiation seems the beginning of the end. The time appears to have come when the old prediction of the Moslem prophets shall be accomplished, and the last vestige of the invading Turks be driven out of Europe.—N. Y. Times.

Obituaries.

HOUGHTON. In Woodstock Valley, Ct., Aug. 14th, 1875, Bro. Eddy T. Houghton, aged nineteen years. Also, at the same place, Sept. 19th, 1875, Sr. Mary Houghton, aged fourteen years.

The subjects of this notice are the eldest children of Bro. and Sr. Darius P. Houghton. They were both smart and promising young people, and the death of so many young people as has occurred in this vicinity of late is felt to be quite a calamity by the community at large. Bro. and Sr. H. both experienced religion some time prior to their last sickness, and were prepared for the solemn change. This sad affliction falls heavily upon the parents, but they are not left comfortless, for they both look forward to the time when the dear ones shall come forth to die no more. May the Lord sanctify this bereavement to their present and eternal good.

The funeral of the former was attended by Eld. Rockwell, Baptist minister, of whose church he was a member. Text, Job 5: 6-7. That of the latter by the writer. Text, 1 Thess. 4: 13.

P. S. BUTLER.

IRELAND. In Plymouth, Me., Sept. 8th, 1875, of dropsy, Charity, wife of Daniel E. Ireland, aged fifty-eight years.

Sr. Ireland was afflicted with acute rheumatism the last year of her life, which, in connection with the dropsy, made it one of severe suffering; but she bore it with much christian patience. She has been a pattern of piety for many years. She embraced the Advent faith in 1842, since which time she has been its firm advocate. In her dying hour she gave a timely testimony of advice and encouragement to her family, and to the little church at Plymouth, which will doubtless be long remembered by them. She fell asleep in hope of living again when Jesus comes. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, at North Newport, where she was brought for burial. May God bless the afflicted family, and help them to prepare for a reunion on the earth made new.

E. V. B. EDGERLY.

BARTLETT. In Vienna, Me., June 13th, 1875, Sr. Martha J. Bartlett, aged fifty-seven years.

Sr. Bartlett has long been a servant of the Lord. She was formerly a Methodist, but hearing of Jesus' coming and the resurrection of the dead, she saw the fact of the mortality of man, and died in the faith of life through Christ only at his coming. She leaves a husband to mourn her loss, but not without hope, which he has as an anchor to his soul. Their home has long been the pilgrim's place for rest, but now is desolate. Words of comfort were spoken by Elder E. M. Haggett. H. B. SEVEY.

WORTHINGTON. At the residence of her son, S. W. Worthington, North Bennington, Vt., Nov. 29th, 1875, Mrs. Princess A. Worthington, aged sixty-three years.

Sr. W.'s last days were full of suffering, which made her long for rest. Her hope was strong in the Lord, and she died in the faith in which she lived, clinging to the promise of a renewed earth, where none of the inhabitants say "I am sick." The funeral was largely attended by all classes, who knew and loved our sister. She leaves weeping children, to whom she, being dead, yet speaketh. Words of comfort by the writer. Text, "I shall yet praise him." A. A. WAITE.

SHURTLEFF. In Bridgewater, Vt., Nov. 1st, 1875, Bro. E. G. Shurtleff, aged thirty-two years.

Nearly two years ago our brother gave his heart to God, and was baptized into Christ as we believe. He lived most of the time with a firm hold upon the hope of eternal life at the coming of the King of kings, who is divinely appointed to destroy the King of terrors, and at that time give immortality and the never fading crown. He leaves a beloved companion, who deeply mourns her loss, with other near and dear friends, all of whom we pray may find his Lord and Savior before he shall have passed by for the last time. Bro. Gideon sleeps, but not forever. Services attended by the writer. A. DAMON.

HILL. At Cabot, Vt., Nov. 18th, of typhoid fever, Sr. Sally, widow of the late Bro. T. I. Hill, aged forty-nine years.

Thus within three years the entire household—parents, son—have fallen asleep in Jesus. Not only the relatives, but the church, feel that they have sustained an irreparable loss in the removal of this christian family. As they have sown liberally, so shall they reap in harvest. We spoke to the vast audience who gathered at the chapel from Rev. 21: 7. N. WHEELER.

WILKINSON. In Dansville, N. Y., Dec. 7th, 1875, of typhoid fever, John Wilkinson, aged twenty-six years.

He was a promising young man, of rare talents, and beloved by the whole village; but death makes no distinction. All must yield to its mandate. His father had designed to retire from business, giving it into the hands of this son, bu he is left alone. Brethren, pray for him, and the family. Their affliction is deep. I tried to comfort them from Thess. 4: 14. M. R. MILES.

ROLES. In Lynn, Mass., Nov. 25th, 1875, Angie G., youngest daughter of George S. and Mary E. Roles, aged eight years and four months.

She was a lovely child, a sweet singer, a joy to her parents and grandparents. May they all be ready to meet her when Jesus comes.

Yes, she has gone and left us,
Our darling Angie dear,
Her pleasant voice and little songs
Will cheer us no more here.
But we shall meet her soon again,
With the loved ones gone before,
In that bright land, when Jesus comes,
Where parting will be no more.

E. A. SISSON.

LEIGHTON. In Lisbon, N. H., Nov. 20th, of consumption, Mr. Simeon Leighton, aged sixty-three years.

Thus father and mother sleep, while children mourn. Text for the occasion, 2 Cor. 5: 10.

N. WHEELER.

BICKFORD. In Henderson, N. Y., Sept. 10th, 1875, Mrs. Betsey Bickford, wife of Abel Bickford, aged fifty-eight years.

In deep sweet sleep thine eyes are closed
To all beneath the skies;
But when Jesus comes to wake the dead,
Then, loved one, you'll arise.

CLEVELAND. In Bridgewater, Vt., Nov. 22d, 1875, infant child of John and Louisa Cleveland.

It is well with the child; for thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy. Services by A. DAMON.

FOREIGN NEWS.

BREMEN, Dec. 16. Thomas, the passenger on the Mosel, and owner of the cask of dynamite which caused the terrible disaster at Bremerhaven, confessed his guilt, saying he had accomplices at New York.

There is a rumor that the Duc d'Aumale, the fourth son of Louis Philippe, and whose wife, daughter of Prince Leopold of Salerno, died in 1869, is to marry again, and this time to no less a personage than Princess Thyria, daughter of the King of Denmark, sister of the Princess of Wales and of the wife of the coming Czar. This rumor naturally creates a great deal of political as well as social comment, for in case the marriage occurs, it is believed that it will augur a Russian support of Orleanism and an alliance in future of the coming Czar with France against Germany.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Montreal, Dec. 15. Over eight hundred starving men surrounded the City Hall to day and called loudly for the Mayor, who delivered a brief address, during which he assured them that he would ask the Council to do all it could to provide them with work. The men seemed discontented and said they could not wait long. A commune has been formed and trouble is apprehended.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. A family of five persons, Shaffer by name, were poisoned to-night by eating soup. An examination revealed that the soup had been made the day previous in a copper kettle; that the portion not eaten then remained in the pot till to-day, when it was partaken of. All who ate the soup subsequently suffered severely from the effects of the poison communicated by the copper from the kettle. The physicians attending the family are of the opinion that the sick ones are in a dangerous condition.

Pottsville, Pa., Dec. 10. Dispatches from Mahanoy City and Gilberton this morning state that there is much excitement in that vicinity in consequence of two dreadful murders committed this morning by a party of masked men who entered the house of Charles O'Donnell, seizing and binding him and carrying him out back of the house, where he was shot dead. A man named McAllister was also taken from his house and shot dead. A later dispatch states that a sister of McAllister was also murdered. The murderers are supposed to belong to the Molly Maguires, now a terror to the mining region. No reason can be given by the people living in the neighborhood for the bloody deed.

THE HOPE OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

G. CROUS, JR.

Behold the King of kings will come,
His advent draweth nigh,
When God's dear saints will all get home,
There nevermore to die.

The righteous dead awake and sing,
And rise to meet their Lord;
Ten thousand angels on the wing,
Will then obey his word.

"Gather my saints from every clime,"
The Savior gives command,
"And in my kingdom they shall shine,
A holy, spotless band."

Methinks I see that heavenly throng,
All robed in spotless white;
And hear them sing the Victor's song—
O, what a glorious sight.

There's Abraham, the friend of God,
There's David, Paul, and Job,
And millions more this earth once trod,
Safe in that blest abode.

O, gracious God, shall I be there,
And with those worthies rest?
A crown of fadeless beauty wear,
And triumph with the blest?

Yes, by thy grace I hope to stand
On that celestial shore,
And in fair Eden's blissful land,
Rejoice forevermore.

THE COMING CRISIS.

By Rev. P. B. MORGAN, Rector of St. John's, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Notwithstanding some hopeful and encouraging characteristics of the present period, such as the existing revivals of religion, activity of missionary societies, and circulation of Bibles and tracts, it is impossible to deny that a far more imposing array of facts may be gathered to prove that we are on the eve of a revolution which, in its disastrous moral and political results, will be without a parallel in the annals of history; when the long pent-up fires of moral evil mixed with human passion gaining the ascendancy will leap their barriers, and the civilized world will find itself plunged into a night of darkness so gross, and anarchy so terrible, that the French revolution of 1792 shall be no more than as a type and shadow of the universal ruin. Dan. 12:1, 2; Rev. 16:18, etc.

Of the possibility of a sudden and general revolution we have demonstration in the revolution in France in 1792, as also in the far more general political upheaval of Europe in 1848, when not less than twenty-two kingdoms were revolutionized in less than six months. If there is no danger, then why is there a cry of alarm from the political watchmen of Europe? Why the call of Bismarck and Gladstone to the statesmen and sovereigns of Europe to guard against the aggressions of Popery. And if there be no danger, and the world is really improving—then why this steady increase of European armies? Take the following as an illustration:

From a table of statistics lately published in the London Times, it is shown that since 1859 Austria's army has advanced from 634,000 to 856,980; Russia's from 1,134,200 to 1,301, 501; Italy's from 317,650 to 605,b00; Germany's from 836,000 to 1,261,160; the French army from 840,500 to 977,600; and England in the same time has increased her army from 256,800 to 478,820.

And in America the prospect is not much improved. Lacking belligerent neighbors, we nevertheless have the same fermentations of moral evil. Our daily papers are unsavory reminders of the fact that sin is a deep, terrible, and all-pervading moral disease, threatening the very life of the body politic—only needing sufficient time to develop the inevitable crisis. A few years since, the Y. M. C. Association gathered statistics from all parts of the United States showing that six-tenths of the population of the country habitually absented themselves from any kind of religious worship.

The New York Evening Post lately said of New York city: "Here are half a million of people to whom the preaching of the gospel is as strange as to the inhabitants of New Zealand or Ashantee!"

The New York Tribune says there are in New York fifty thousand families of infidel and atheistic tendency and without a copy of the Bible. The Rev. Theodore Cuyler, D. D., lately showed that the traffic in stimulating liquors is increasing at a rate terrible to contemplate. He said the sale in the United states in one year was enough to load a train of wagons reaching from New York to San Francisco. And who needs to be told that taking the country as a whole, the most terrible of crimes are on the increase in a ratio far exceeding the increase of our population. The birth-rate is strangely unlike what it was formerly. Debauchery and crime are making steady headway among high and low.

Thirty or more years ago, the Rev. Lyman Beecher, D. D., raised a cry of alarm at the inroads of Papacy. Not a few have since considered this matter and come to the sober and solemn conclusion that there remains for us a struggle to the death with Romanism. Already the Romish church has set itself squarely in defiance of civil law in Quebec in the matter of Guilbord's burial.

We are assured by our Lord himself, that "as it was in the days of Noe, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." And as then the world was not converted by the preaching of righteousnesss, but was "corrupt" and "filled with violence" (Gen. 6:5-11), so we are assured it shall be at the second advent of our Lord. "The flood came and took them all away" (Matt. 24:39), as of course it would not, had they been converted.

The last days—and there are no days after the last in this dispensation—are to be "perilous days," "evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse"—not better and better, 2 Tim. 3. We are to encounter "scoffers," 2 Pet. 3:3, and "seducing spirits," 1 Tim. 4:1. The nations are to be angry, Rev. 11:18, and filled with perplexity and trouble consequent upon their corruption and violence, Luke 21:25; Dan. 12:1, preparatory to the battle of the great day of God Almighty, Rev. 16. To these we might add great numbers of passages showing that this, like every previous dispensation, is to fill up its cup of iniquity, ripen its tares, and end in human failure and the overwhelming judgments of God.

The whole aspect of the world, according to prophecy, shows that the personal advent of Christ, accompanied with terrible judgments upon every nation, is close at hand, to raise the sleeping saints, to translate the living christians, to destroy the Popish, Mohammedan, and Infidel Antichrists, and to reign visibly over the earth for 1,000 years, as promised in Rev. 20.—Signs of Our Times.

THE SACRED RELIC.

E. S. CRAIG.

When a very little girl of seven years, I was called to bid a beloved Sabbath school teacher good-bye. She was a lovely lady of twenty-four years, and I well remember how we all loved her. I shall never forget how it almost broke my heart when she took my hand in her's (even then chilled by death), and told me she was going to die. "But, Emma," said she, "I am going to give you a little book, which I wish you to keep to remember me by." Oh, how I loved that little book. Many times have I wrapped it in my handkerchief to keep from soiling it, and wept over it such bitter, bitter tears. Now, friends, why do you think I so dearly loved the little book? It was because I loved the giver.

Christian friends, we have a sacred relic left us by our blessed Savior. Is it precious to us? or does it lie upon the shelf from week to week covered with dust? Do we silently allow wicked people to speak disrespectfully in our presence of this holy keepsake? or do we show our love to the Giver by our devotion to the book? Suppose my beloved teacher had told me, when she handed me the little book, "I am going away for a little while, but I will come again by-and-by, and will take you to a beautiful home. In the meantime you read this little book, as it will tell you all about that home, and the beautiful things I will give you when I come." Do you think I would have laid the book away, and have forgotten all about it? Oh, no; I would have read it again and again; and how precious would have been the memory of that absent one; how many times would I have longed and looked for his return. You would call me ungrateful and unloving did I act otherwise; yet how many there are to-day, who profess to love the Lord, who are carelessly tossing about this sacred relic he has left us, and disregarding his dying testimony in which he promises to "come again," that we through him may "inherit all things."

I think we may readily test our love to God by our love for the blessed Word he has given us. It is useless for us to stand up in the experience meetings and say we love the Lord with all our hearts, when our Bibles are lying all dust-covered and forgotten at home. Brethren, let us not be deceived; "God is not mocked."

I called one afternoon upon a friend, whom I had frequently met at holiness meetings when in the Methodist church. Being somewhat hurriedly called from home, I had not my Bible with me. After tea I wanted to point out to her some texts, and I asked for her Bible. She said, she had none; she had left it at her last boarding place. I knew it had been six months since she left there. Oh, how shameful to so dishonor our blessed Jesus; and how this friend whom I respected fell in my estimation. A sanctified christian without a Bible! and plenty of means with which to buy one.

Christian friends, let us ever remember that our profession will profit us nothing if our hearts are not filled with a deep, a longing love after God. This love will bring us at once to our Bibles, and spontaneously, as it were, we will seek the secret place of prayer, because it is there that we meet our beloved, and our hearts are blessed, and we be led to exclaim with the poet of old—"As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." Let us daily examine our hearts before God, and test our love to his Word. Do we press this God-given treasure to our heart, while tears of love and gratitude fill our eyes, while our eager and longing hearts watch and wait for his coming?

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE DISTURBED THESSALONIANS.

"Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand."—2 THESS. 2:1, 2.

The christians at Thessalonica seem to have constituted the model church of apostolic times. They certainly enlisted Paul's regard and commendation beyond any other congregation assembled by his labors. We may, therefore, safely look to them for a truthful and complete exemplification of what true Christianity is. And when we come to inquire narrowly into the nature of their experience and character, we find their Christianity summed up in two grand articles. In his first letter to them, the inspired apostle says, "Ye turned from idols, to serve the living and true God;" this is the first article; "and to wait for his Son from heaven" (1:9, 10]; this is the second article. And this was the whole of their Christianity.

From this, then, it appears that the earnest and confident expectancy of the soon coming of the dear Lord Jesus from the heavens, was as much and as vitally a part of primitive, practical, and experimental Christianity, as conversion itself; nay, that it was one of the very elements of the early conversions, and one of the great and leading things to which apostolic conversions were made. And it would verily seem from this Scripture, that those who have not been brought practically to take in the doctrine of the second advent, are only about half converted. They may have turned from idols to serve the living God; and so far, their religion may be true and genuine, but, until they have added the other item, of waiting for his Son, Jesus Christ, from the heavens, they have only gone half the length of these Thessalonians, and are so far short of being complete christians. It is a sorrowful statement, and one which bears disastrously upon the claims of much that passes for Christianity in our day; but how to escape from it, with these texts before us, is not so easy to be seen.

The text quoted gives intimation that the church at Thessalonica had become, to some degree, perplexed and disturbed by certain misrepresentations, touching their expectations, which misrepresentations were of a character to change a topic, hitherto their strength and joy, into a source of disquietude and alarm. What was that misrepresentation?

From the reading of the English text, it has been taken that the Thessalonian christians were in distress and perturbation at the idea of the nearness of the day of the Lord; as if they were afraid of it, alarmed at it, and overwhelmed at the prospect of having Christ to come in their day. It has even been quoted to prove that it is dangerous and anti-apostolic to preach the doctrine of any near or speedy coming of the Lord; that it unsettles people, and robs them of their proper spiritual comfort, and fills with unnecessary anxieties. But nothing could be farther from the facts in the case, or the real meaning of the apostle's words.

It is abundantly evident, from both epistles, that these Thessalonians were most warmly and joyously interested in the faith and expectation of the near coming of their blessed Lord. They were converted from their old idolatries, and entered the service of the living God, in waiting for that coming. Paul speaks of it as their crown of rejoicing—as their highest and most effective comfort—that the Lord himself was speedily to descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God. And he commends their hopes of happiest rest at the revelaton of Jesus Christ. How could it be possible, then, that their agitation of mind and perplexing trouble were the result of an apprehension that the Savior was to come in their day? So far from being a source of disastrous disturbance, this was the gladdest and most consoling element of their faith and hope, so declared by the inspired apostle himself.

But this being "at hand," of which the apostle speaks, was something wholly different from the idea that the day of the Lord was only about to come. The original word is enesteeken (from enisteemi), and occurs seven times in the New Testament, but no where else in the sense of impending or near, in the relation of not yet quite arrived. In five out of the seven instances, it is translated by the word present, in the sense of already come. The phrase, at hand, is used in twenty other places in the New Testament, in the sense of near, thought not yet quite arrived; but not in a single instance is it enisteeken, as here. Other versions are much truer to the meaning of this word. The Syriac, which is the oldest translation that was ever made, renders it by the phrase, is come. The Swiss version renders it the same, est arriv. Macnight translates it, hath come. And the evidence is perfectly conclusive, that such is the proper and only true signification of the word. Luther renders it vorhanden sei, to be present, to exist at the time. Oishausen says it refers to "what is present." Bengel says, "enesios means present." It does not mean something at hand, in the sense of being near, though not yet come, but something at hand in the sense of already come—as being already present—without ths possibility of any further waiting for it.

And the moment we take this true and only proper sense of the word, the complexion of the whole passage is entirely changed from the false interpretation which some have put upon it, and the precise nature of what was disturbing these Thessalonian believers becomes manifest. Somebody had been telling them that the day of the Lord had already come; that it was then present; that it had arrived, and was no longer a subject of hope or expectation. If what some were thus teaching them was true, they felt that a great misfortune had befallen them. They had been comforting themselves by the idea that, with the arrival of that day, their dead would be restored to them; that their companions in the faith, who had fallen asleep, were to arise with the dawn of that day; and that they themselves were to be translated, and caught away to the clouds, to be forever with the Lord, when that day should come. And if now it had already come, the conclusion was inevitable that they had been cherishing all these glad hopes in vain, and that all their joyous expectations had proved a cheat and a failure, for their dead had not been raised, and they were still left upon earth. Could it be that their faith was a mere deceit, and that all they had hoped from it was mere delusion?

Such a doctrine, then, as that the day of the Lord had come, was a virtual subversion of their Christianity and their hope. It was well calculated to shake them from their mind as christians, to confuse and confound all their ideas, and to fill them with utter despair. Hence, the interference of the apostle to counteract the misrepresentation, and restore their peace and comfort. He beseeches them and conjures them most solemnly, by our gathering together unto the Lord Jesus, and as they valued their hopes, not to be so easily and quickly shaken in mind, not to be troubled by such sorrowful misgivings, and not for a moment to believe that the day of the Lord had come, or was then present in any such sense, as to be no longer a subject of joyful anticipation, as it had once been. No matter in what way such a false idea might come to them, whether by apparent revelation from the Spirit, or by oral communication as if by apostolic authority, or even by letter, professing to come from under his own hand, he charges them by no means to believe it, and not for an instant to give place to the truthless assertion that the great day of the Lord was not still pending and still future.

No, no; not so unsubstantial and disappointing are the promises of Christianity. Not such an unreal thing is the doctrine of Christ's coming, the resurrection of the dead, and the gathering of the saints in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. These things are literal realities. And whether from the Scriptures, or from philosophy, men propose to explain them away, and resolve them into mere poetry and gorgeous Oriental metaphor, it is the part of true christian faith and obedience to refuse place to anything short of the literal and complete fulfilment of what Jesus promised, and his inspired apostles so constantly preached.

It was Hymeneus and Philetus who, in apostolic times, undertook to spiritualize and explain away the resurrection as past; but Paul says of them, that, concerning the truth, they erred; that they were overthrowers of the faith, and that their words were a corroding canker. 2 Tim. 2:17, 18. And he here says as much concerning all such as would spiritualize and explain away what else pertains to the literal promises and hopes touching Christ's coming and the day of the Lord. None of these things are past, and none of them have yet transpired; and he who says they have, however he may explain it, is a heretic of a deadly sort, and no christian man can hold with him without ruin to his faith.—Sel.

— We have known churches to act like silk-worms, when they had spun themselves a fine house; they went in, shut the door, and went to sleep.

HUMAN DEPRAVITY.

Man is spiritually a paralytic; man is spiritually dead—dead in trespasses and sins. It comes to this, and there is no evading the conclusion; either infinite wisdom has made a mistake in introducing the provisions, the helps and means of salvation, or man is utterly destitute of holiness, depraved and lost in sin. You do not provide to introduce into your business a partner who has been in since the formation of the firm; you do not sow wheat upon a field already whitening to the harvest. Neither does God send the Holy Spirit to beget that which is already begotten; nor does he provide to revive that which already lives, nor to supply anew that which men have never lost. If God has given the Holy Spirit that we may be made new creatures in Christ Jesus, then we were dead, just as the Scriptures teach. If the Holy Ghost comes to instruct us, then we are ignorant; if to open our eyes, then we are blind; if to reconcile us to God, then we are alienated from him; if to redeem us, then we are the captives of sin and Satan. If man is not really in this condition, then the gospel is what some make it—a beautiful sham, an unmeaning, useless scheme, or show of mercy and life, where mercy and life are neither intended nor needed. Christ and his gospel meet no want, supply no necessity, unless man is fallen, guilty, hardened, dead and lost.—Selected.

LINES.

ELLA M. LUNT.

O Christ, I come to thee;
All other help is vain;
Bear me above the storms of life
Till thou shalt come to reign.

Let thy dear kingdom come;
We do not want to stay
Amid the strife, and death, and tears
That come across our way.

"Keep us in perfect peace,"
How often we have prayed;
"I will," the voice of God replies,
"If thou on me art stayed."

We need unwavering faith,
Or we can't rest in Thee;
But tossed and driven by the winds,
Just like the troubled sea.

O Christ, I come to thee;
I count all things as dross;
Just now I see the cleansing stream,—
I'm resting at the cross.

HOW TO SPOIL A MEETING.

This is very easily done, as many can testify. Still it is done a great many times ignorantly, when persons are very anxious to make the meeting a success. Having observed some upon this point, I may be allowed to make some suggestions.

1. Commencing meeting. Very much depends upou commencing meeting promptly. I have been at churches where it was impossible to commence a meeting within half an hour of the time appointed. Many will be sure to be late, and some will come when the sermon is half or two-thirds through. There is no excuse for such miserable slackness as this, and it is nothing but slackness. I have carefully studied this difficulty till I am satisfied that the elder or leader is the one who is largely responsible for it. If you have a prompt leader, he is always on time, and you will alway find the church prompt also. But if the elder or leader is behind, and is slack about commencing on time when he is there, you may be sure that the church will always be behind time.

Some good-natured elders, who would naturally be prompt themselves, fall into a habit of waiting for others rather than to commence without them. But this is just the thing that never ought to be done. Let the elder wait for these tardy members ten minutes one Sabbath, and they will be sure to be ten minutes late next Sabbath; for they will reason thus: "Meeting did not commence till ten minutes after time last Sabbath; so I need not hurry this time." And those who were on time will reason that they got there too early last Sabbath. They do not wish to do it again, and so they will be late next Sabbath; and so it will go on, the meetings commencing a little later every Sabbath. Finally a meeting appointed at half-past ten will commence about half-past eleven. This will ruin any meeting in a few months.

Now there is one sovereign remedy for this, and only one, viz: Let the leader himself be sure to be in his place, ready to commence meeting promptly upon time. Having selected a proper hour, upon which the church are all agreed, let it be distinctly understood that services will commence at the time appointed, whether there are few or many present. If there are but one or two present, or no one but himself, let the elder open the meeting with singing, prayer, and testimony, as usual; and when all have done, dismiss the meeting. Let the tardy ones have the pleasure of coming after the meeting is out. A few Sabbaths of this experience will cure them. Few persons are willing to be always tardy. But if they find you will wait for them, they will be sure to wait as long as you will; whereas if they find the meeting always commences on time, they will finally form a habit of hurrying around in time to be there.

2. Continuing the meetings too long, Sabbath after Sabbath is a fruitful source of evil. We frequently hear persons complain that the Sabbath meetings are so long and tedious that they become a dread to them. No time is left them for rest or home reading. The Sabbath meetings should be a pleasure and not a dread. From an hour to an hour and a quarter is as long as a meeting should last ordinarily. Then if there is a Sabbath-school, another hour for that is all that should be taken. If it is carried beyond this, the interest cannot be long maintained.

3. A good many churches are greatly burdened with one or more persons who are wonderfully endowed with the gift of continuance in speaking or praying. You may exhort them to be short; but it avails nothing. You may remind them that there are others to speak, but it is vain. You may tell them that long speaking is ruinous to a meeting, but they never seem to think that this means them. It is all for somebody else. I have tried most every way to cure such persons, but confess that I have utterly failed so far.

Probably such persons have no idea what is meant by a long speech. But let us suppose a case. Here is a church of thirty or forty members. Ordinarily there will be twenty or thirty out at a meeting. The meeting should last one hour—sixty minutes. The meeting should be opened with singing and several prayers. There should be occasional singing between the testimonies. All this will consume at least one-half the time, so that we only have about thirty minutes left for speaking. This will give a minute to a minute and a quarter to each one, provided every moment is improved, but less if it is not. Hence ordinarially a testimony of a minute and a half in length is a long testimony. One two and a half long would be very long; and one three to three and a half minutes is tediously long and unbearable, unless the person has something extraordinary to say. Then he should be enough shorter for three or four weeks to make it up.

Now, brother or sister Talkative, if you want to know whether you are accustomed to talk too long or not, just take your watch and time yourself, and you will no doubt be astonished to find that you are accustomed to talk tediously every Sabbath. Other points might be readily named, but we forbear, lest by too long a lesson we should discourage those who need to reform upon these points.—The Advent Review.

MEETINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. Editor:—The meetings conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey began in Philadelphia on Sunday, Nov. 21st. Although the secular press has given full reports, to the extent of several columns daily, a letter giving some information in regard to the movement, and the preparation for it, may not be uninteresting to your readers.

Some weeks ago it was decided to invite Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Philadelphia, and a committee of fifteen ministers, representing all the evangelical denominations of the city, was appointed to arrange for their coming. This committe organized by electing Rev. Richard Newton, D. D., of the Episcopal Church, Chairman, and Rev. C. P. Masden, of the Reformed church, as Secretary. The Ministers' Committee then appointed a committee of thirteen prominent and well known business gentlemen of the various denominations to conduct the business arrangements for the meeting. This committee elected Mr. George H. Stuart, Chairman, Mr. John R. Whitney, Treasurer, and Mr. Thomas K. Kree, Secretary.

This committee at once proceeded to business. They secured the old freight depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., Thirteenth and Market Streets, which extends from Market Street back to an alley 373 feet, and from Thirteenth to Juniper Street 250 feet. About two hundred workmen were at once set to work making the necessary changes, and in three weeks the building was ready for occupancy. The main audience room is seated with eight thousand nine hundred and four chairs. At the back end, is the speaker's platform, rising in tiers, with one thousand three hundred and four chairs, making a total seating capacity of 10.208. Two-thirds way forward the floor gradually rises to the front of the hall, giving every one in the audience the opportunity to see and hear the speaker. Although a very large audience hall, its accoustic properties are such that the speaker is readily heard in any part of it. In addition to the main audience hall there are three large inquiry rooms; these, with the committee rooms, are provided with seven hundred and fifty-two chairs, making a total seating capacity of 10.960 chairs in the building. There is a vestibule, thirty-three feet wide, around three sides of the building, from which there is egress by ten large doors opening out upon Market, Thirteenth, and Juniper Streets.

The three large doors opening from Market Street, with the vestibule thirty-three feet wide, running the width of the building, will be the main place of entrance, and the four large doors opening into the main aisles, running the length of the hall, will be the doors of admission to it. There are four cross aisles six to eight feet wide, and four main aisles eight to ten feet wide, as well as a wide aisle running clear around the audience room. The building is heated by steam supplied by a hundred horse power boiler. It is lighted by eleven large reflectors down the center of the hall, and sixty rings, and a series of parallel jets running around the building, making in all about one thousand burners. Daylight is admitted, and abundant facilities for ventilation is obtained by a series of skylights in the roof. A telegraph from the speaker's platform is carried to the assistant chief usher's platform at the front of the Hall, and connects with the wires to the central city station. A corps of two hundred christian men have volunteered and are acting ushers to seat the public. A choir of five hundred voices under the leadership of Mr. Sankey conduct the services of song. A class of three hundred christian workers, selected by the ministers from all the churches of the city for services in the inquiry rooms has been trained by the Rev. Richard Newton, D. D., of the Episcopal church, Rev. R. M. Hatfield, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopachurch, Rev. W. P. Breed, D. D., of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. J. Wheaton Smith, D. D., of the Baptist church.

The ministers and christian people of the city of all denominations are heartily in sympathy with the work, and have rendered every assistance in preparing for and conducting it. The cost of all the immense preparations will be about ($25.000) twenty-five thousand dollars, and it is expected from present indications that no call for contributions will have to be made, but that the money will be the spontaneous gift of those in sympathy with the movement. Gospel Hymns, the new book arranged by Messrs. Bliss and Sankey, is used in the meetings. The authors' royalty on this book, instead of going to Messrs. Bliss and Sankey, is paid to a committee, consisting of Messrs. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia; John V. Farwell, of Chicago; and Wm. E. Dodge, Jr., of New York, to be devoted to christian work. The royalty of Moody and Sankey's Hymn Book in Great Britain amounted to over $31.000. Messrs. Moody and Sankey refused to receive any of the money, and the London committee sent the money to Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, who applied it to religious work in America.—T. K. CREE, Sec. Ex. Com.

Philadelphia, Nov. 30th.

NEVER attempt to do anything that is not right. Just so surely as you do, you will get into trouble. Sin always brings sorrow sooner or later. If you ever suspect that anything is wicked, do it not until you are sure that your suspicions are groundless.

GEMS.

— Souls are won, more by the unction of grace, by the power of love, than by the force of argument.

— All have their faults. Every man leans upon his neighbor, and love alone makes the burden light. If you cannot support your brothers, how do you think your brothers will support you?

— Nothing is troublesome that is done by a willing hand.

— Walking with God is a secret reliance or dependence upon him for all we want.

— The christian should carry religion into the world, but keep the world out of religion.

— The gravest events often come with no more noise than the morning star makes in rising.

— Buy not, sell not, where self-respect is bartered, for that once lost, the mainspring of honor is rusted and decayed.

— A modest person seldom fails to gain the good-will of those he converses with, because nobody envies a man who does not appear to be pleased with himself.

— The christian who has put aside religion because he is in worldly company, is like a man who has put off his shoes because he is walking among thorns.

— Carefully avoid those vices which most resemble virtue; they are a thousand times the most ensnaring of all vices.

— Too many people embrace religion from the same motives that they take a companion in wedlock—not from true love of the person, but because of a large dowry.

— Bless God for every twig of his rod, every drop in his cup. He holds the rod and the cup in the same hand by which he gives you Jesus Christ; yea, he afflicts you with the same love, with which he gives you any good.

INCONSISTENCY.

The following was said to be spoken by a colored preacher south:—"Bredren and sisters, you have heard of the chilren of Israel crossing the Red Sea. Well ebery ting 'bout dat am perfect plain. The chilren of Israel [it was in the winter season] went over on de ice, and when de sun came up, it thaw de ice, and de Egyptians go on de ice, it break froo, and drown every one of dem." An old gentleman back by the door said: "You are wrong; dat be a tropical clime dare." "Set down dare," said the speaker; "dis happen a long time ago, fore da had any tropical clime."

Now I ask, Is this any more inconsistent than what thousands of persons preach who have been through some of the finest colleges in our land? I think the theory of many preachers is no better. M. S.

WORDS FROM ABOVE.

JULIA B. LLOYD.

The heavenly voice is sweet—
"I will abide with thee:
Cast out the idols in thy heart,
And make thou room for me."
How winning is the smile
That lights the holy face,
Bright beaming from the parted cloud,—
I wonder at the grace.

I will not doubt his word
Of promise so complete;
I'll cast all thoughts of sin away,
Then listen for his feet.
And now, I weep for joy
That from a heart like mine
Rivers of peace may ever flow,
And love that is divine.

I go with lighter steps
Each earthly cross to bear;
The Victor's crown I gladly seek,
Which I each day may wear.
The heavenly voice is sweet—
"I will abide with thee:
Cast out the idols in thy heart,
And make thou room for me."

Westfield, Mass.

THE EASY YOKE.—Those who serve God faithfully serve him easily. Some endure religion, others enjoy it. To him that hath shall be given, and he shall have more abundantly of weariness or joy, darkness or light, anxiety or rest, hardships or ease, according to the stock on hand. Those who get into the tidal wave of God's purposes and grace, are supported, comforted, exultant in the testimony, "Thine is the power." That makes the yoke easy, and the journey delightful.

HOME AND HEALTH.

WALKING AS AN EXERCISE.

Dr. H. I. Bowditch has been writing a series of articles for the London Sanitary Record, on "Health and the Means of Preserving it." In the third paper, which is devoted to "Exercise," after enumerating the principal kinds, he goes on as follows: "Of these the most universally applicable, and usually the best form of exercise, is walking. Unfortunately our climate, with its snows and intense cold in winter, and equally intense and depressing heat in summer, prevents all of us from walking as much as would be useful, or as much as can be done in some other countries throughout the year. Whenever it is feasible, it probably exercises the whole body better than any other method. It becomes, however, very uninteresting, even in a large city, if made simply for health's sake. Therefore it is always well to combine with it another object, either of business or of pleasure. Hence a profession that will compel out-of-door exercise is the best prescription one can give.

I have in recollection now a case of a naturally feeble man who had very decided signs of pulmonary disease, with bleeding from the lungs. He was a newspaper carrier when he called to see me after one of his bleedings. I feared, at that time, that exposure during the winter would be very pernicious and perhaps fatal to him. Under this exercise, however, taken daily in rain and storms of all weather, and by the use of cod-liver oil, he wholly recovered.

Those of my patients who have most frequently recovered are those who, by advice, commenced years since, and still continue, several times daily, their "constitutional" walks around the "Common" in Boston (about a mile.) They will continue to do so while they live, because they know from experience now, that not only their health, but their real comfort, depends upon a strict attention to that course. Omission of that exercise for a single day perceptibly affects them unfavorably.

Two more obvious advantages arise from this course: 1. Every muscle in the body is gently and uniformly brought into action by the swing of the legs and arms, and consequently of the trunk in a vertical direction. The undulations made by the head, chest and abdomen in a vertical plane are thus, not only according to "Hogarth's line of beauty," but also in that tending to perfect health. Every internal organ is gently stimulated to more robust action. The circulation goes more freely and uniformly.

2. Never, in a common walk, does a person breathe twice the same air, because he is constanty changing his position. This fact alone is of incalculable advantage. Some writers contend that the re-breathing of air once partially used, is one of the most fertile causes of consumption.—Londom Times.

MILD STIMULATION.

The part of the body most strongly affected by stimulants is the nervous system. The functions of this part, such as the thoughts, feelings, and will, are always more or less changed by their use. The demeanor displays an unnatural, though agreeable, liveliness, which is afterward succeeded by an unnatural and disagreeable gloominess. And it is upon the nervous structure that stimulants mainly act, so it is upon this part that the diseases which they produce are mainly seen. The life-long play of even gentle exhilaration upon the nerves first weakens, and then prevents their action. Such an effect may not be witnessed in those of strong constiution in the first or second generation, but come it certainly will, and usually in a very sad and distressing way. To no other cause can the great prevalence of nervous derangements in our day be fairly ascribed.

The connection between this nervous impairment and its cause is very commonly overlooked, from the fact that its manifestations do not usually follow immediately after the application of the cause. Warn a person of the probability of corns forming on the toes by the wearing of tight shoes, and, if these excresences have not shown themselves, the answer is, "Tight shoes do not hurt me in that way." Before the disease occurs, men and women seem to be willingly blind to the fact that it is not a few, but many, days of pressure which develop corns; that it is not one excess in drinking, but many, which develop tremens, that it is not one day's abuse of the stomach, but many, which develops dyspepsia. Words of caution to young men concerning the injurious effects of tobacco, elicit, in ninety-nine out of a hundred cases, the reply, "It does not hurt me." Does not hurt you! Wait and see. In years to come, when you ought to be in your prime, you will be a poor, nervous, irritable, nerve-dried creature. Your hands will tremble, your head will ache, your sleep be fitful and disturbed, your digestion impaired; in short, the unnatural and transient pleasure at one end of your life will be more than counterbalanced by the discomfort and misery at the other. It is a truth of the greatest moment, which ought to be so impressed upon the mind as to be always rising up within it, that transgressions of the laws of health if not punished at one end of life, are sure to be at the other.—Health Reformer.

"YOU CAN'T CURE A DRUNKARD WHILST A SLAVE TO HIS PIPE."

"My father," said John, "used both rum and tobacco, and I took to his example as a duck to the water. I smoked young, and it created a fiery appeiite for alcoholic drinks, which resulted in making me a drunkard. When twenty years old my case was alarming, and my friends took unbounded pains to pluck me from destruction. . . .

In two years from this time, by a happy providence, I heard a lecture on tobacco, which showed me my mistake, and snatched me from perdition. The lecturer maintained that nine drunkards to ten—probably ninety-nine to a hundred—were tobacco-users; that the tobacco habit was a boyish one, early formed, and laid the foundations of the gloomy structure of a drunkard; that the Washingtonians who apostatized were tobacco sots, almost to a man; that the pledge, to be safe, must go against drug and drink; and that thousands of drunkards, by giving up tobacco first, had soon given up rum with comparative ease. Tobacco feeds a fire which no temperance efforts can quench. I followed the lecturer's advice, and that night threw away my tobacco forever.

Now came the tug of war, not with my bottle, but with my pipe. I was unnerved—my nerves were like the sails of a ship dismantled by the storm. I felt nothing, thought nothing, did nothing; and like the poor college student, I cried, 'I need tobacco to give me resolution to give up tobacco!'

But God was on my side. I avoided old scenes and associates; I avoided gluttony, and sparingly used nutritious food. I used cold water freely, inside and outside. With gratitude to God, I can say, I then conquered both tobacco and rum, and for seven years have trampled both demons under foot.

Hence, I would say to every temperance society, and temperance man, the world over, you can't cure a drunkard whilst a slave to his pipe."—John Mitchell.

FARMERS.—The fourth annual report of the Massachusetts Board of Health contains some interesting statistics of the average length of life of the farmers of that State to be fifty-five and one-fourth years; a much longer term of life than is enjoyed by any other class of people within its boundaries. The class next in point of longevity is composed of mechanics who pursue their avocations in the open air. These live fifty-two and one-half years on the average.—Ex.

TO CURE SALT RHEUM.—Get sweet fern; if it does not grow in your locality, you can procure it at the druggist's. Steep and drink it for a common drink, also bathe the parts affected, and it will help you.

And plant his kingdom here.
Long have his chosen people

Bassett, of Connecticut, was submitted to the committee on credentials, who reported that they did not deem him eligible to membership, he not having any certificate, which report was accepted and adopted. The report of the last annual meeting was read, accepted, and adopted, as was also the report of the meeting of the Board of Directors, held in Boston in September last. It was voted, that all preachers present, working in harmony with the Association, be invited to participate in the meeting.

By request, the Constitution of the Association was read by the Secretary. It was then voted that the Association proceed to revise the Constitution. Also, voted, that all resolutions be presented to the Secretary in writing. A motion was made to have a committee on revision appointed, to report their action to the meeting, but was not carried. Voted, that the Constitution be revised article by article.

On motion, the first three articles were changed as follows: the first article was amended by inserting the word "Second" before "Advent"; the second was amended by substituting the word "Association" for "Society" in the first line; and a similar change was also made in the third article. The amendment of the fourth article relating to the basis of membership gave rise to a lengthy discussion of the matter, which was continued during the morning session the next day; but the views of the assembly were finally put into acceptable form, as appears below. Without rehearsing the various ideas suggested, or describing in detail the several steps by which the entire revision was accomplished, it will probably be satisfactory to present simply the result of the deliberations of the Association, by setting forth as follows the revised

OF THE
Second Adv. Chris. Association.

ARTICLE I. This Society shall be known by the name of the Second Advent Christian Association.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be the promulgation of Bible truth, and the promotion of vital piety by the formation of an Advent Christian Publication Society.

The Board shall make annual reports of all funds received and disbursed, of business transacted, and of the condition of the various interests of the Association.

ART. VII. The Annual Meeting of the Association shall be holden at such time and place as may be determined on by a vote of the Association; or, if such vote be not taken, at such time and place as may be determined by the Board of Managers. At the request of ten members, the President shall call a special meeting of the Association by giving six weeks notice thereof. The President, with the counsel of the Vice President and Secretary, may call a meeting of the Board of Managers at any time and place, by giving two weeks notice thereof.

ART. VIII. All the officers of this Association, and of the Advent Christian Publication Society, together with the Editor or Editors, shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Association.

ART. IX. The President shall deliver an address at each annual meeting, setting forth the general interests of the Association, its needs and prospects, recommending such action as he may deem important, that it may accomplish its sacred mission.

ART. X. All members of this Association shall hold their membership during the term of one official year.

ART. XI. This Constitution may be revised or amended by a two-thirds vote at any annual or special meeting, when six weeks' notice has been duly given of the intention of such change.

The introduction of the changes and additions so as to make the Constitution read as above, occupied the sessions of Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday forenoon, extending into the afternoon session. A very hearty vote was given in favor of the following:—

Resolved, That the thanks of this Association be, and they are hereby, tendered to the brethren and sisters of the Second Advent Church in Worcester for their christian hospitality in entertaining this Association during its present session.

It was also voted that the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society be instructed to publish one thousand copies of the revised Constitution, and that the Business Agent send a suitable number to the Secretaries of the different A. C. Conferences at their request.

A petition was presented to the Association asking for the publication of a new hymn book, which was referred to the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, with the request that they publish such a book.

*Any body of believers in Christ who habitually associate for divine worship, and are set in church order by the appointment of proper officers, and who observe the ordinances of the gospel, shall be considered a church.

The subject of a new campmeeting ground, introduced by Bro. H. V. Davis and others, was referred to the Board of Managers of this Association for them to act as they may deem best in the case.

It was voted that the record of this meeting be sent to the World's Crisis and Advent Christian Times for publication, whereupon the meeting adjourned sine die.

In closing the report of this meeting the Secretary desires to say that not for years has a meeting of this Association been held in which so many and dear interests have been involved as were involved at this gathering. As before intimated, the change which occasioned the greatest discussion was the revision of the fourth article relating to the basis of representation; but notwithstanding the diversity of views at first entertained, the revision as presented above was adopted by considerably more than a two-thirds vote. The leading thought in all the remarks seemed to be to make such a change as should best serve the interests of the entire Advent body scattered abroad, and we confidently believe that it will be found that the foregoing will do this better than anything of this kind has yet done.

The Secretary is happy to be able also to add that the discussions were characterized by that candor and christian courtesy which becometh men who seek not their own, but the interests of the Redeemer's cause.

C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

"CAST NOT AWAY YOUR CONFIDENCE."

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

The apostle has been briefly describing in the previous verses the sufferings of the saints. He says that they had been made a gazing-stock, that they had suffered reproaches and a great fight of afflictions, and he seems to intimate that the reason why they were enabled to bear up under all these afflictions was because they had confidence in God.

Think for a single moment, my brethren, of the way in which the first church of Christ in its early days was treated. The Roman emperors were determined Christianity should be crushed out from under heaven, and they exercised the utmost conceivable cruelty upon all the followers of the Nazarene. They hunted them and despoiled them of their goods; they imprisoned them—they banished them. They then took severer measures and put them to death—and the executions were not those merely of common criminals, but very frequently strange deeds of violence. We read of them being covered over with pitch, and set up in the garden of the Emperor Nero, and burnt to form lights to illumine that tyrant's midnight orgies. They were dragged at the heels of wild horses; they were taken to the amphitheatre, and made to fight with wild beasts, and put to most wonderful forms of death, as if it was not sufficient to slay them; they were slain with miserable cruelties and with the utmost possible scorn, and yet they did not yield. They were like the anvil which never returns the blows of the hammer, but wears out all the hammers, outlives them all, and conquers them all, simply by patience.

Emperor succeeded emperor, and Christianity continued the same. Like Pharaoh did with the Israelites in Egypt, the more they persecuted them the more they multiplied; and christians seemed almost to court death, for they confessed themselves followers of the despised Christ, and they were glad to go with songs and rejoicings to the place of execution, calling on his name. Now, we have not this same trial to bear—certainly not to the same extent—but still we must not think that persecutions have ceased; for the spirit which is the ground and root of persecutions still exists and is the same. The seed of the bondwoman is at enmity with the seed of the free woman. The seed of the serpent still hates the seed of the woman, and the great battle between good and evil is not over yet, and will not be over; and though there is a change in the mode of warfare, yet the enmity abides still the same.

Many a working man in the workshops has to run the gauntlet for his Christianity. Many a man in trade gets the cold shoulder and is sneered at if he is known to be a genuine christian. The mere professor of Christianity mingling with those of his like may find a smoother pathway to heaven; but the decided man who keeps his spirit in the path walks with God. I believe most christians must still expect to meet with some tokens of animosity from the enemies of Christ. Still is it true that we must fight if we would win.

Now it becomes important for us to see what it was that supported the early saints, because the same support is still available for us. They were supported by an inward confidence, and we must be supported the same. As they were victorious in life's battle, so must we conquer in ours by the selfsame sword and shield with which they went forth to battle. The apostle speaks therefore to you in these sober and calmer days, even as well as to those who were persecuted by the heathens of old. "Cast not away therefore your confidence which hath great recompense and reward."

The first thing to consider is what are the elements of confidence; and then, secondly, how we may cast it away; and, lastly, the reasons why we should do nothing of the sort.

First, what is the confidence the apostle herein indicates? The Greek word from which it is taken is worth looking at. I do not quite know how to render it. No rendering is probably superior to that given in the authorized version of the Bible, for it does mean confidence; but it is used in many places in a somewhat different manner. Where the disciple said that he had boldness; "When they saw the 'boldness' of Peter and James they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." It is the same word in Greek as rendered here, confidence. It was said of Christ, "Now speakest thou plainly." According to our version it is the same adverb as is used here in the rendering confidence; and in the same chapter we get the word under the form of "liberty to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus Christ." I gather by looking at the last that the manward side of this confidence may be expressed by the term boldness; the inward part is well described by the term confidence, and the godly side of it by the mode of freedom, an at homeness in the liberty which we feel towards God. Perhaps I shall be able to bring out these three ideas by degrees.

Let us take the elements which make up this complex word called confidence. I believe no man can be assured to have it unless he feels the conviction of the truth of the gospel—the full conviction of the principles which he has received by the teaching of the Spirit of God—that they are the very truths of God. In this age we have very little to fear in the resoluteness which holds the truth so sternly as to be called bigotry. I rather like people that come under this sneer now-a-days. They are like the back-bone of creation, for we have come upon an age of molluscs in which people believe either nothing or anything you like. I used to think that some things must be true, and other things of an opposite tendency must be false; but I have been told—though, mind you, I have not received the lesson—that in view of things and opinions there was nothing fixed; no facts, no dogmas, no doctrines.

One of the last modern discoveries is to describe the man as most charitable who believes all round are alike aright, though they contradict each other.

With God's truth I hold that such ideas are no charity, nor ought we to think so. Charity seems to me to lay in holding what I do believe to be true as with a death grasp. "Confidence" must begin in the christian's heart by his being sure that such and such things are taught in the word of God, supported by his own experience, and felt in his soul by the inward witness of the Spirit of God; and no man can get that back-bone into his inner nature who is not strong in the Lord; who holds this thing to-day. another to-morrow; and who is like a weathercock upon the church steeple, and is ready to turn round according to the way in which the wind blows. Now I believe there is a broad church school. If you ask them if there are any doctrines in the world worth dying for, they would be obliged to confess they don't think there are. I very much question whether some brethren's doctrines are worth losing. Unhappily for some, they are so undermined to all interests of truth, that they appear to have given up all the foundations of the gospel. I would have you beware of them, and of falling into their spirit. We believe some things not because they were taught us by our parents, but because they are burnt into us as by the Spirit of God to be part of the warp and woof of our being.

I was arguing last week with a young gentleman who was an infidel, and he said to me, "I don't wish to alter your opinions." I replied to him, "Did you ever hear of a little bird which, alighting on a rock, said, 'I don't wish to shake it?'" Very much the same kind of metaphor must I apply to you. I have not read these things yesterday, nor looked them up out of books. They came to me; my whole consciousness manifested them; I live upon them; they are my soul's best food; I could not do without them. If a man says he is not sure of anything, let him hold his tongue till he has sat at the feet of Jesus and learnt. Then say with David, "We believe it." A man comes along with a great lever, but he has not got a fulcrum, and the place he selects for a fulcrum is a vapory cloud. He had better go home and first get something solid for a fulcrum. Without believing something you can't effect anything.

Martin Luther said, "A man can never move the world that lets the world move him; if he is not certain about something, let him step forth; we can't have 'ifs' and 'ands' where the soul is concerned, and heaven or hell are at issue." We speak like John of what we do know, and testify what we have seen, which with our eyes we have looked upon, and with our hands have handled—of the word of God, those things declare we unto you.

We must get this confidence of the conviction of the truth of the gospel. Then we must get the full assurance of our interest in these things, for no man would die for a doctrine except for that in which he has an interest. "Election!" What a horrible doctrine until you know that you are among the elect; then how sweet it becomes. Continual perseverance! How great a task it seems until you rest in Jesus, who enables you to persevere; then how blessed in persevering! The doctrine of grace! It is like Aaron's rod, like serpents to some people who are frightened at it. But if God gives you the prophet's hand, then you can take it by the tail, and it stiffens to the wonder-working rod, and it works miracles in your hand. But the thing is to get the grip of these things to know that they are yours!

Redemption! How sweet; but to be myself redeemed, this is the happiest of all. Conversion! A blessed truth; but to be converted and know it. Forgiveness! A charming doctrine; but to be forgiven and know it is the cream of the truth! A man is well content to fight for his country when he knows it is his own country, his own hearth and home, his own wife and children. For these he is well content to go to war. I shall not wonder if you lose confidence in a doctrine if you have no interest in it. But when it becomes yours—your life, your jewel, your all, you can't possibly cast it away. One says, "I trust I believe in Jesus; but I can't say I have full assurance in faith." "Full assurance" is the privilege every christian may have; and you ought not to cease contending until you have it. You can't believe too much in Jesus; you can't rely too fully upon the power of his blessed blood.—Signs of Our Times.

PARABLE OF THE WHEAT AND TARES.

C. B. MESSENGER.

Commencing with the 24th verse of the 13th of Matt., we read—"Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, the kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field. But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares? He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, nay, lest, while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together till the harvest; and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn."

It is evident, doubtless, to all, that the Savior is referring in this parable to the righteous and the wicked. The tares are the children of the wicked one; but the righteous, or good seed, are the children of the kingdom. Matt. 13: 38.

What do we learn from this parable? Let us see.

Ever since the gospel commenced being preached, and the good seed sown, the enemy has been sowing tares; and Jesus says, Let both grow together till the harvest (or time of harvest), and in the time of harvest (mark the language), I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn. When is this done? At time of harvest. What are the tares? The children of the wicked one. What is the wheat? The children of the kingdom. What is done first at the time of harvest? The tares are gathered and bound in bundles to burn. After this, the wheat, or children of the kingdom, are gathered into the barn, or into the kingdom of their Father. In harvesting, the sheaves, or bundles, are scattered over the field, and are gathered and bound with a band. The field is the world, we are told by Jesus. Can we find anything in the world at the present day that is like bundles.

Was there ever a time when there was so many secret societies, clubs, orders, and organizations, under some name as at the present time? Never. The different orders and societies can be counted up by the hundreds, and almost daily some new order or society is springing up. Was there ever a time like it before, I repeat. No, never. Do they take God's word as their rule of faith and practice? Not one of them. Then should christians be found among them? Not if they are the bundles that are going to be burned.

Some will say, Why, you think it is all right to belong to a temperance order, do you not? That is doing much to rid the country of intemperance and its evil results. Not if it is one of the bundles of the parable that is to be burned.

These bundles of tares are all going to be burned pretty soon; and if so, brethren, let us beware how we get bound in with them. It seem to me it is a dangerous position for us to take when we join hands with the ungodly under the name of brotherhood. As christians we should shun them.

Dear brethren, do not let us turn a deaf ear to the admonitions of the Lord; but let us examine the word, and see what it teaches us, who are "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." We are told if "our eye is single, our whole body shall be full of light." Then let us "gird on the armor, and fight manfully the battle of the Lord." He that shall come, will come in a little while, and will not tarry. When he comes, he will bind all the children of the kingdom in one bundle, that shall never be broken or burned. Glory to God for the prospect! I want to be among that number.

QUALIFIED.—The greatest, the best, the most useful, the most necessary qualification for a preacher, is the Spirit. Christians are as a body without a soul; ordinances are fountains without water; ministers are windows without light; providences are clouds without rain; promises are trees without fruit. But with the Spirit, our prayers are to be prevalent; our faith will be strong; our hope will be blooming; our love will be increasing; our preaching will be useful; our exhortations will be fiery; our consolations will be heart-easing; our warnings will be solemn; our reproofs will be pungent; our applications will be close; our preaching will be successful; and, through its influence, sinners will be converted, and believers sanctified. May God give us the Holy Ghost.—David Stoner.

THERE are two of whom it is said, "All things are possible." With God all things are possible, and all things are possible to him that believeth."

LIGHT IS SHINING.

A. PARMELEE.

God can "furnish a table in the wilderness;" and he will, if we wait on him, and wait patiently, and do not murmur in our hearts, "make all things work together for good."

For the two years past I have been trying to serve God, and have attended church regularly, hearing many things taught which I believed to be decidedly heterodox, besides some good things which have profited me much, many true things also. My soul has at last been refreshed for the first time, in Medina, by listening to a discourse upon the second coming of Christ. I handed, among others, one of the tracts on the second coming of Christ, to Rev. Mr. Mc. Gerald, pastor of the M. E. Church in this place. Reading the title, he said, "I am going to preach on that subject" [naming the time], "and have got my text selected." Accordingly I repaired to the church on the evening appointed, but the weather being very stormy, and his congregation small, he announced that, owing to that fact, he should defer the subject till he had more hearers. Hearing last Sunday evening (Dec. 5), that that was the evening decided upon for the promised discourse, I went, and I can tell the readers of the Crisis that I never heard any Adventist present that subject more clearly or with any more enthusiasm than did Mr. Mc. Gerald.

In opening, he remarked that the subject was one upon which opprobrium had been heaped by its friends, insomuch that those calling themselves "Adventists" were regarded with contempt. If he were going to take a text, it would be the following: "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so. Amen" (Rev. 1: 7); but as he proposed to let the Word tell the story, this would be but one among the many passages he should quote. He then quoted from the words of Jesus himself, and from the apostles, many of the passages referring to that glorious event, making very appropriate comments, alleging that the second advent of our Savior was literal and personal. In quoting Titus 2: 18, he remarked that the rendering should be, "Looking for that blessed hope, even the glorious appearing," etc.; and on Paul's words to Timothy (2 Tim. 11: 8), he remarked as follows: "You didn't expect to get your crown at death, did you? If you did, you are very much mistaken. You will not get your crown till the King comes." This declaration doubtless sounded strange to Methodist ears, but, coming as it did from a Methodist minister, they cannot denounce the Adventists for it, if they cannot receive it.

I was not only delighted with the subject, which is, of all subjects, the most sublime and desirable to me, but was filled with love for the brother, for the earnestness he manifested, and his love of the appearing of Jesus.

Bro. Mc. Gerald has now commenced his third year of labor in Medina, and a more zealous worker in the Lord's moral vineyard can scarcely be found in these parts. There are few in this locality who love the appearing of the Lord, and it is so strange that they can really love Jesus, and not want to see him. Ah, poor human nature is the same now as it was when they said, "Away with him, away with him. Crucify him;" and the thought of his return "in the clouds, with power and great glory," is, to many, not a pleasant subject to contemplate. But I am satisfied that there are many beloved disciples, who, did they understand the grand results of that event, would be delighted to contemplate his sure and speedy return.

I wish all christians were enlighted upon this question. How much less of worldliness we should see among them, that is, if they loved his appearing. Mere intellectual enlightenment upon any question will not profit us in the great day of the Lord. "Though I understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." Only "faith which works by love," will benefit us when we stand before the Judge of all the earth.

Now if Bro. Mc. Gerald will not, at the next funeral at which he officiates, tell the friends of the departed one that the soul of the deceased is happy in heaven with Jesus, and "all who have gone before," but adhere to the apostolic teaching that, henceforth there is laid up a crown of righteousness for all who love his appearing, he will show himself a true and consistent teacher of the faith.

One thing more he said in connection with his remarks on Paul to Timothy which I omitted to state, viz., that they would rest at death; that they would go to Paradise, to await the resurrection. But what a gloomy prospect for us if the coming of the King is as far in the future as many of them say, or till the whole world is converted, to remain "unclothed" between here and heaven, "earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven," all that time. Only think of the apostle Paul being in a conscious state for the last eighteen hundred years, "earnestly desiring" still, to be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven. Surely, a person cannot be very happy when "earnestly desiring" something, especially when that something is hidden in the the far-off future, and no clue can be obtained as to the time of its acquisition. O, what an agony of suspense! and this indeed must be our condition between death and the resurrection if the theory of an intermediate state be true. The text, Rev. 6: 9, 10, so often quoted in support of this theory, indicates discontent, and there can no real happiness exist in such a state of mind. I tell you, friends, this will not do. You must either give us the Catholic Purgatory, the unconsciousness of the dead, or the genuine "orthodox" view of the immediate transition of the souls of the righteous at death into a state of unmingled bliss. Which shall we have, Bro. Mc. Gerald? Your present position involves you in inexplicable difficulty, as I have clearly shown. To adopt the Catholic dogma would be to you, retrogression, and to embrace the Bible view, that "the dead know not anything"—that "there is no knowiedge, nor device, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest"—that "the dead praise not the Lord"—that "in death there is no remembrauce of thee," (God) that when we are "clothed upon with our house which is from heaven" etc., "when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory," men will separate themselves from your company, and cast your name out as evil. You would no longer be popular, and you would learn what the apostle Paul meant by "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ;" for he, you know, as well as all the primitive christians, suffered most of all for "preaching through Christ the resurrection of the dead;" and that truth is as unpalatable to the adversary to-day as it ever was. The opposers of the sleep of the dead shrug their shoulders, and say, "it is a long time to sleep, isn't it?" Well, my friends, it is a long time to lie awake all naked, "earnestly desiring to be clothed," isn't it? "Let God be true, but every man a liar." Amen.

"TO ARMS!"

A mighty conflict is in progress. It is the war of the centuries, between truth and falsehood, holiness and sin, good and evil, God and the devil. This conflict deepens. There is not a soul on earth who does not bear a part in it. Each and every one is for or against; neutral positions in this war, there are none. He or she that is idle is against God; and to be against him is to be in peril of irretrievable loss, for Jehovah will at last certainly win. There is so much to do and so short a time in which to do it, that to do nothing is a crime of the deepest dye. Besides, to sit down and sit still is personally perilous. Resist, or be swept away. All may, and should work. Wisdom cries, Work well. Some can do much; others but little; each can do something; all can do more than they dream.

Mankind are treading the verge of a wonderful age. Mighty foes heave and toss society. Mighty activities accelerate its masses to a pitch of speed absolutely headlong. Rest or calm there is none. Hurry, hurry, haste haste, goads on all men. A trumpet-call sounds, "To arms!" Under a blood-stained banner, or beneath a black flag, all are ranging. What are you doing? Where is your place? Come out of your hiding; come into the light. Report for active service. You are wanted in the King's grand army. Cling to the evil, and you will go down in the swift coming struggle. Awake! Bestir thyself. Fold not thy arms im lazy lock. At the foe. Dare to do right; dare to be true. Do your own work. No other can do it for you. The conflict intensifies as the age's end approaches.

It is the last age of sin's reign on the earth. The sinful cherub rages, and his dragon voice roars hideously. His day of doom is fast nearing. Men may well be alarmed at his fury and power, but God is not alarmed. God's hour of eternal victory cometh. The storm will end in glorious, ceaseless calm. All that sin has disjointed and marred, shall return sweetly into its assigned place, and be restored to its old-time beauty. The conqueror shall rest from toil, and wear the laurels of the hard-won fight.—D. T. Taylor, in Bible Banner.

THE DANGER OF THE AGE.

I suppose if we could get at the full record of the Assyrian consciousness in the times of the greatest material splendor of the nation, we should find that they were quite confident that they were the greatest people in the world by virtue of their riches, their luxury, their numbers; yet how easily were they destroyed by a people of higher intelligence! Now when it is held that railroads, telegraphs, and weather reports constitute a beatific state, it seems to me that we are as much mistaken as the Assyrians were. What connection exists between railways and good conduct? Or between telegraphs and national probity? I hope I do not seem to undervalue great inventions; but I would suggest that honesty is in no sense superseded by inventions, nor intelligence by the weather reports. The inventors have not shown us yet how to elevate character by means of a steam lift; nor are any virtues, I believe fostered by the perforating telegraph. Yet people rely upon these things; they put aside the remark that they are essentially a failure as yet, so far as the more valuable results are concerned, and call it discontent or dilletantism, or the "anti-patriotic reaction." It is neither; it is a much more serious thing; it is a warning not to neglect the spirit of civilization during this era, in which we are so taken up with its forms.—Galaxy.

WHEN mountains are in the way of the Lord's people, he does not permit them to ascend and pass over their summits, but he bids the mountains give way. He will not suffer his saints to walk too high; therefore in his providence he reduces the hills to vales, which are pleasant and safe to humble pilgrims.

DOING WELL.—The three-month's column looks inviting. Now is the time to make an earnest effort to scatter the blessed truths we love so dearly. Any sacrifice made for the benefit of others will not be overlooked by the Lord. Are there not some who would like to send out one hundred copies, fifty or twenty-five? Do it for Jesus, who has done so much for our benefit. Let us see your name in the list. Cannot every paying subscriber afford to send ONE copy for three months to some hungry soul who is seeking light? A little self denial will save that amount, and may be the means of doing a great amount of good. Try it. M. G.

WESTFIELD.—There is no abatement of the interest in the meetings at Westfield. New ones give up to Jesus about every night, and many more are under conviction. The inquiry meetings are well attended, and are very interesting. Strong men are bowing to Jesus, and becoming his disciples, rejoicing in the truth. A good interest is springing up in other churches. The Lord is doing great things for many. While sinners are seeking and obtaining pardon, professors are making a full surrender to Christ, and receiving the gift of the Spirit, removing all doubts, fears and anxieties, as to their acceptance in Jesus.

There are some good workers in the church, who take an active part in the inquiry meetings. Members of other churches are united with us in the good work, and are becoming interested in the evidences which show the speedy coming of Jesus, and the other important truths of the Bible which have been covered up by human tradition.

Thank the Lord that light and truth are spreading in all directions. Doors are opening, and earnest invitations, are being received from different denominations, for preaching on the prophecies and signs of the times. This is the time when faithful laborers should devote all their powers to the work of saving men from the approaching destruction. Let no effort be spared that can be made to rescue the perishing.

M. G.

SUDDENLY.

The day of the Lord cometh suddenly, as a snare is sprung or a mine explodes. It will come as a thief upon all who are asleep as to a knowledge of its approach,—who see no waving signals and read no divine utterances manifesting and declaring its nearness. The unbelieving world will remain unconscious of the real danger that awaits them, until the trump of doom shall arouse them to the overwhelming fact that their day of probation has ended, and they are summoned to appear before the Judge of quick and dead to hear the final sentence of Eternal Justice.

Awful position! Who can understand it with heart unmoved? The awful day of decision cometh swiftly. The nations are rapidly wheeling into the line of battle long ago seen by prophetic eyes and painted by the inspired pencil. The certainty that the judgment trumpet is about to sound increases every week. Brethren in Christ, be sure and gain the evidence in your hearts that you stand in readiness every moment to hear the bugle note calling the armor-clad millions to Armageddon's bloody field. Watch, and keep your garments pure, for the call to the marriage feast is about to sound sweetly upon the bridal ear of Immanuel's spouse. Wait and watch! wait and watch, for he cometh speedily! Waste not a moment! Pluck a few more, if possible, as brands from the burning. The moment hasteth when he that is unholy must be unholy still, and he that is holy will be made equal to the angels, and inherit all things. Be ready! Be ready, for it cometh quickly! Amen.

FAITH.

Gospel faith is made in the Scriptures the first and essential condition of salvation through Christ. It is through faith that we are saved; for "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Our eternal salvation is therefore hinged upon it. If our faith fails, our hope of eternal life fails; but if our faith is genuine and "fail not," then our hope remains, and everlasting blessedness is secured.

True saving faith is therefore of infinite importance to us. We cannot be too careful to thoroughly criticize and analyze our faith, individually measuring it by the divine standard and comparing it with examples given in the Scriptures, to ascertain its properties, qualities, fruit, and results.

God has made faith in man the condition upon which reconciliation can be made between himself and man, because unbelief was the original cause of unreconcilation between them. When the cause is removed the effect will cease.

When two parties are at variance, one or both of them must be in fault, and a righteous and just reconciliation of the parties must depend upon the party or parties in the wrong yielding to the right. God, the Creator of all beings, and sinful man, a being created by God, are at variance. The great work of Christ, the Holy Spirit, and the Gospel, is to produce a reconciliation or harmony between these parties. Christ (and included with him is his true church) and the Gospel, as arbiters in the case, must therefore, in order to produce a oneness between the antagonists upon the principles of truth and justice, demand that one or both yield to the claims of truth and righteousness.

The great and first cause of this antagonism, according to God's account of it, was in the fact that man was induced to discredit what God had said, thus reflecting upon his Creator's character for truth, charging him with saying what was understood not to be positively true.

In this case man's understanding of what would result from certain acts did not agree with the legitimate import of the words God used in describing that result, and so it made God mean what he did not say. God said that the result of transgression would be "Thou shalt surely die;" but man was induced by the serpent to believe that he should "not surely die," but that the act of transgression would cause him to rise to a higher plane of existence, and "be as gods," where he would enjoy a higher degree of knowledge—"knowing good and evil."

These sentiments were presented to the woman, by the serpent, as God's sentiments; for he said—"God doth know," thus appealing to him for authority for the ideas which were opposite to those his own words expressed. The first pair were deceived by this satanic interpretation of God's Word, which made death a stepping-stone to a higher mode of existence, instead of a punishment for sin as God had declared. This caused the woman to eat, because she thought it would "make one wise"—"as gods." It was a false understanding of God's Word produced by a false interpretation of it, which resulted in the first act of rebellion, and caused the terrible antagonism between man and his God. The sin lay in the fact that man did not believe God meant what he said. All damning unbelief is predicated upon the same principle of rejecting the words used by inspiration, and not allowing them to be applied according to their proper and legitimate meaning.

God has demonstrated the truthfulness of this position in the fulfilment and application of his divine utterances in every age and case in all the past. Every prophetic event which has transpired in the past ages has corresponded exactly with the proper meaning of the language used in foretelling them. When the judgments of God have been poured out upon men for their unbelief, it has been in every case that they would not believe that such events as the language God had used in describing them would transpire; but in every case when the inspired language was applied as given, and men prepared for just such events, and at such time and place as the words indicated, they have been justified by God for their faith and delivered from those judgments.

It is true that God uses metaphors, parables, and symbols in his Word, but they are only used to embellish and make impressive subjects which are somewhere in the sacred writings stated plainly.

The Jews were ensnared at the first advent just as Adam and Eve were in the garden, by accepting as divine truth a false interpretation of God's Word. They rejected Christ because they understood that the predictions describing their Messiah at his first advent did not mean what the language signified. They, therefore, with that interpretation could not apply them to him or events connected with him, because they could not believe that they were to be literally fulfilled, but should be applied mystically. Jesus plainly taught them that that was the damning defect in their faith.

He taught the unbelieving Jews that they were false religious teachers, perverting the Word of God by their traditions, which were false ideas produced by unauthorized mystical interpretation of divine truth.

They in turn attempted to prove him a false teacher by showing that he disregarded the traditions of the elders as of any divine authority, and said—"Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread."

His answer to them exhibits the real defect in their faith, and wickedness of their unbelief, when he said—"Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition? For God commanded, saying, Honor thy father and mother; and, He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death. But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father, or his mother, It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, and honor not his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition. Ye hypocrites! well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 15:2-9.

Why did Jesus so terribly denounce those Jewish teachers and their worship, branding them as hypocrites, and their worship as being "vain"? Because their teaching was, "for doctrines, the commandments of men."

What were the particular doctrines referred to, and by what proof were they sustained? The doctrine that if a man did not honor his father or his mother he should "be free." What proof did they give that such a man should be free? The commandment of God, in which he says of such a man, "Let him die the death." They had presumptuously and wickedly wrested that passage by introducing qualifications which God had not given, by which the passage was made to mean freedom from death instead of "death," as God had said.

This is exactly the same perverson of the Word of God as was made by the serpent in the garden. God said, "Ye shall surely die"; but the serpent said, "Ye shall not surely die." God said, in this case, "Let him die the death"; but they said, "He shall be free." This is what Peter means by wresting "the Scriptures unto their own destruction."

The most fatal unbelief in man is that which professes to receive the Word of God as of divine authority, and at the same time tampers with it, spiritualizing it, so as to make it mean what its expositor may desire for the gratification of a carnal mind, contrary to the meaning expressed by the words of Inspiration.

The only divine standard we have for christian theology and faith is the expressions used by God. If God has not expressed the ideas and facts to be revealed, who can express them? If God did not mean what he said in his Word, who has received the authority to tell us what he did mean?

Faith is credence given to "evidence of things not seen." Where is the evidence upon which christian faith rests? It is in the Word of God—the revelations made by God. Jesus said, "Thy Word is truth." Is the truth found in the expressions of revelation, or is it to be reached through interpretations of those expressions? We answer emphatically, In the expressions. We hold with the poet—

"God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain"

There were as many as fourscore predictions, expressing incidents, circumstances and facts connected with Christ at his first advent, and every one of them were fulfilled by events which corresponded exactly with the literal meaning of the words used to foretell them.

Faith in Christ, therefore, at his first advent, consisted in believing that he was the Messiah, because his history corresponded exactly with the language God had used in describing the Messiah. God justified all who exercised that kind of faith at that time, and condemned all who neglected or refused to believe on that principle.

The principle of faith in God, which requires men to expect that he will do just what his words of promise, threatening or prediction indicate, has been the principle manifested in the faith of all God's servants in all the ages of sacred history.

Read Paul's long catalogue of the faithful in the eleventh of Hebrews, preceding the Gospel age, and he expresses the fact in every case that they looked for and experienced just what God's words of threatening and promise indicated, which was just what they all understood by the revelations given.

What the world needs to-day is to have thundered in their ears the truth that they must believe God or be damned.

This free religion, that allows men to believe all the vagaries that Satan can introduce, and all the spiritual nonsense that designing men may teach, leaving the words of Inspiration as meaningless as the chatter of a swallow, burying the authority of divine truth deep in the grave of mysticism, giving those men assurance of divine approbation and future felicity, is as false and damning as the Satanic unbelief introduced into Eden. The great need of the church and the world is bold and apostolic preaching, making the faith once delivered unto the saints essential for salvation. It is faith in "present truth" which enables us to walk with God to-day. It is faith in God's forewarnings of coming events which causes men to prepare for those events. It is faith in God's precepts and commandments which enables men to live lives of devotion, acceptable to God. Pure devotion dies where there is no pure faith.

The church advances when she goes from "faith to faith"; but she fearfully retrogrades when she refuses to accept God's last edition of faith. Very weak faith will accept popular truths; but it requires strong faith, vitalized by the Holy Spirit, to accept and proclaim unpopular truths. It is this faith which produces war between the church and world, and gives the church the victory. The real strength of faith can never be tested only by the acceptance of anti-scientific or unpopular truth; therefore God has been careful to keep such truth before his people of all generations. A true Bible faith is the standard by which all men may determine the purity and safety of their religion.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

The political clouds in Europe present no "silver lining" to the careful observer; but their aspect grows darker and darker. The best judges can see no way out of existing difficulties, short "of a general war." For this reason, the great political powers are making constant preparations for the terrible conflict. A Paris correspondent of the Boston Journal says:

"The Eastern question in all its phases has been one of the chief agitations of the week. The purchase of nearly half the shares of the Suez Canal by the English Prime Minister occasioned much editorial writing. . . . Every Christian in Europe seems thoroughly out of patience with the Turks, whose foothold in the provinces now in insurrection is daily becoming more and more insecure. Gen. Ignatieff, the astute Russian, who seems to have a thorough contempt for the ordinary cautious methods of diplomats, told a Times' correspondent recently that Turkey cannot long exist, because she will not, and possibly is unable to, fulfill her promises. I saw a day or two since a gentleman who has just returned from Mostor, in the Herzegovina. He met Server Pacha there and had a long and interesting interview with him. Server Pacha is the man who was appointed to confer with the European consuls as to a means of pacifying the Christian subjects in Bosnia and Herzego vina. He has issued a lengthy document filled with those ingenious ambiguities of which the Orientals are so fond, and for which they manage to keep the recipe a profound s cret. My informant's opinion, based on two months of careful observation in the revolted provinces, is that the Turks mean to grant nothing in reality, but to continue in the old cut-throat swindling fashion as long as they can. He thinks that they are convinced that their stay in Europe is short, and that they mean to do as much harm as they can before they depart. Meantime the insurgents are taking very good care of themselves; and if their leader, Lynbebeatic, had not been laid up sometime ago with a fractured arm, they would have accomplished much in the way of killing Turks already. They have had several severe skirmishes, not to say battles, with their enemies, since winter has set in, and with the aid of the Montenegrins, who are gradually giving themselves entirely to the movement, they may compel the Turks to recognize their complete independence. . . . Their struggle will continue unchecked until spring; then, who knows what may happen? Intervention, perhaps; aud does not intervention mean the beginning of a general war in Europe?

Great events may be expected soon, that will make strong men tremble, if they are not in Christ.

In the Independent, Dec. 9th, is an article from Abbe Michaud, headed "a religious war near at hand." He says:

"I mean to prove by facts, which, unfortunately, are unquestionable, that the Romanism of the present day, far from being a religion, is only an aggressive and contentious political system. and that, in view of the gigantic organization which the Jesuits in Rome are everywhere developing, a religious war is inevitable and even near at hand.

Assuredly it is not the indifferentists in religion who will begin this war. Yet they too will perforce take part in it, in defense of their civil and political rights, which will be attacked by the Jesuits and Romanists. For it is to be observed that the Jesuits and Romanists aim not only at universal religious supremacy, but also at supremacy in civil and political matters. "The temporal," say they, "must be subordinate to the spiritual; the State to the Church. . . .

"But the question grows bigger still with peril and menace when we consider the speech delivered by Cardinal Manning (then Archbishop Manning), on January 20th, 1874, at the meeting of the League of St. Sebastian. "Now," said he, that the nations of Europe have risen in revolt, have dethroned the Vicar of the Church so far as it is possible for men to do so, and have made usurpation of the Holy City a part of international law; when all this has been done, there is but one solution of the difficulty—a solution which I regard as imminent—and that is the terrible scourge of a Continental war—a war which will surpass in horrors the wars of the first Empire. I do not see how this war can be avoided. And it is my firm conviction that, despite all obstacles, the Vicar of Christ will be restored to his legitimate place.'"

There is a fixed determination in the minds of the leading Catholics to restore the temporal power of the Pope, or perish in the attempt. Their plans are well matured, and the hour for action is apparently near at hand. When the war breaks forth between Catholics and Protestants, mercy and toleration will find but little room on either side. A scene of bloody destruction may be expected, such as the world never witnessed before. It is the battle of Armageddon. It will be the time when the saints are to "be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Those in Christ have nothing to fear. Jesus will be the hope of his people; their deliverer.

Abbe Michaud says in conclusion:

"In short, it is plain that, first, the Jesuits and Ultramontanes virtually hold doctrines which lead to insurrection—even bloody insurrection against their opponents; that second, they are getting ready, organizing for this war. This is an undoubted fact as regards Europe, and especially France. As for the United States of America, there, too, are Jesuits and Ultramontanes who have the same nature, the same orders, the same designs as those of Europe. But they are in a minority; they will bide their opportunity with all the more patience since it only a question of time."

Says the New York Witness, Dec. 18th, 1875:

"There can be not the slightest reason for doubt that at any moment the great powers of Europe may precipitate the fall of Turkey. . . . The Russian Ambassador at Constantinople makes no secret of his views of the frailty of the tenure by which the Turk retains a foothold on the continent of Europe. He asserts that Servia and Montenegro could, at any time, be let loose upon the Turk; and the flames of revolt would spread to Bulgaria. This would be the destruction of the rule of the Turk. The Porte cannot delay the evil day. 'A liberal Sultan and a liberal Pope, says a great French journalist, 'are equally impossible.' . . .

With this Eastern Question ready like a mine to explode at a moment's notice, all Europe one large arsenal, and Great Britain contemplating making soldiers of her entire population capable of bearing arms, many express the greatest apprehension for the peace of the Continent, and the fear appears to be well grounded that the next European war will be terrible indeed."

The following is the present aspect of things in Turkey:

"Ragusa' Dec. 18. A conference of the united Christian representatives of Bosnia was held at Jamnica yesterday, for the purpose of discussing the present aspect of the conflict with the Porte, and of agreeing upon a plan for united action. Eighty representatives were present. It was unanimously resolved to continue the conflict until the Turks were expelled from the territory."

Such is the present aspect of things. Is it any wonder that the Holy Spirit moved the apostle Paul to write, "that in the last days, perilous times shall come?" Such times are at our doors. Let the christian be sure that he is clad in "the whole armor of God, that he "may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand." This is the hour for brave men, and decided action; the time to lay all on the altar of sacrifice, and to say to the Lord, "Thy will be done." Half-hearted christianity, now so common, cannot stem the approaching storm. None but true soldiers of the cross, who do not seek to save their lives, have the promise of victory. Every weight, every idol, must be abandoned, and the whole heart given to Jesus, if we would be sure of a share in the eternal triumph of the redeemed. O what a sublime hour is the one in which we are living. Glory to God; the One mighty to save is soon to appear. M. G.

NOT COMMON.—Events like the following do not happen often:

"A young clergyman at Brunswick, N. J., whose salary is not over large, but whose abilities are first-class, recently intimated to his congregation that, in view of the stringency of the times, he would lower his salary to the amount of $200."

It is rare that a person offers to cut down his own salary, or to refuse treasure or honor. No doubt this young preacher will be eminently successful in his labors.

DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY.

A correspondent inquires: Is the doctrine of the Trinity a Bible doctrine? If not, when, where, and by whom was it introduced into the Christian Church?

The word "Trinity" does not occur in the sacred Scriptures. It was first introduced, in connection with christian doctrine, by Theophilus, of Antioch, in the second century. M. G.

SICK AND NEEDY.—I am informed that that Bro. T. A. Cheney, of Rutland, Vt., is sick and in needy circumstances. Perhaps some can do the pleasure of God by sending him aid in this his time of need. "As oft as ye do it unto one of the least of these my disciples, ye do it unto ME."

CONSEQUENCES OF CHURCH NEGLECT OF MORAL REFORM.

If the high ground taken by the fathers of the American Church, especially as enunciated in the celebrated Presbyterian deliverance of 1818, had been upheld and proclaimed by their descendants; if their children had been faithfully educated in those sentiments; if the pulpit and the press had joined in disseminating them through the community; if church discipline and church testimony had been shaped in steadfast accordance with them, the evil of American slavery would have been abated, and it never could have assumed the proportions, or made the demands or created the bitter sectional animosities which culminated finally in the war of the rebellion.

Will the church of to-day take warning from this most melancholy example, or are we drifting towards another similar catastrophe, as a result of church indifference on the issue between drunkenness and sobriety? Shall we some day awake to find ourselves involved in a war of the drunkard-makers and their allies against the framers and supporters of prohibition, local option and civil damage laws? There are just about as many drunkard-makers in the land as there were slaveholders before the war; and the political influence of the one class is perhaps fully equal to that exercised by the other. That there is the spirit of mob violence, and even of bloody hatred among the rumsellers, especially those of foreign birth, towards not only the men but also the women who oppose their traffic, was evident in the treatment of the women of Chicago during the crusades of two winters ago. It seemed as if the least additional incentive was needed to kindle into an open flame the fierce and ill-suppressed passions of that Chicago mob, and to make literal martyrs of the crusaders.

And what is the actual status of the church on this question to-day? During the crusades it was discovered that Trinty church in New York, the wealthiest church corporation in the United States, owned numerous houses where liquor was sold in New York, some of them being of a positively vile and disreputable character. The archbishops and bishops of the English Established church, as a corporate body, are owners of numerous gin-shops in London; in fact, it is said that they are the largest owners of these, perhaps the most infamous and nearest to hell itself of all the drinking establishments in Christendom. Near Albert Gate, London, stands a church with a gin palace on each side of it. These are all built in a row, and are all the property of the same church. It is stated that when the Bishop of London rides from one to the other of his palaces in London, he passes more thon one hundred of these gin shops, erected on land owned by the Church of England.

These are heart sickening facts. And while the great body of our churches in America are comparatively free from such open and glaring complicity with the traffic, it cannot be denied that there is in many quarters a most inadequate sense of church responsibility for the wrong state of public opinion, and a dangerous connivance at moderate drinking, joined with a want of nerve and vigor in church action, which forbids us to say that the influence of the church as a whole in this country is heartily and unmistakably on the side of the temperance reform. Hence our fears of the necessity under Providence of a struggle of a far different character, before our land is freed from the curse of rum. We are confident that there would be no need of such a struggle if the whole church would do its duty.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. Grover.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—It is almost a year since I came back to Father's house, and, confessing myself sick and tired of the way of the transgressor, I made a very solemn covenant with the Lord to be his for time and for eternity. I have found the way hedged up by enemies, but, bless the Lord, he is my refuge in every time of trouble; and to-day I'm sweetly resting in Jesus. Oh, how blessed! I cannot describe the joy and peace, but this much I know, Jesus loves me and saves me. I have tried, and found the Lord is a present help in every time of need, and no good thing will he withhold from those that walk uprightly. Bless the Lord, oh my soul, and all that is within me, and forget not all his benefits. He forgiveth all thine iniquities, and crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him.

I know that we must suffer here if we would wear a crown when Jesus comes; and my prayer is, Lord, make me patient. Help me to be an overcomer. It is through much tribulation we are to gain the rest that remains for God's children. I expect the world to hate me. I do not want any of this fashionable religion, that will go hand in hand with the world. We must expect its scoffs and frowns. Jesus says, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven. For so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

May the Father above help us to live so that the world may know that we are chosen out of it; that we are pilgrims and strangers here.

The time has come when the true children of God should take a decided stand for the Lord. What have they to do with the honors of the world? Eternal honors await them. Kings and priests to God! What greater honor do we want? Oh, I am so glad God has a remnant that are not ashamed of the precious truths in his word, and will preach them.

God always had a separate people, and he always will. He chooses the poor, rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom, yea, and the base and despised hath God chosen, that no flesh should glory in his presence. Paul says—"For ye see brethren not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise."

Oh let us be faithful christians, and then we shall have that sweet communion with God that will bring the blessing down. God bless you, dear ones, and make you faithful watchmen, giving meat in due season, that when he who is our life shall appear, we shall have a crown of life that fadeth not away.

Boston, Mass.

From Sr. S. Young.

Dear Editors of the Crisis:—I have been thinking for a long time of writing a letter for your highly esteemed paper, but I have neglected it to this present day. I feel as though I must write a few words, if no more, hoping if you consider them worthy, you will find a place for them in your beloved paper.

I have recently lost a companion by death; but I praise God that he is not to lie in the grave forever. When God shall sound his trump, "the dead in Christ shall rise first." Oh, what a comfort there is in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have never realized so much of the presence of God, in any time of affliction, as I have this time. He seemed to stand by me to support me as he never did before.

But, notwithstanding all this, I did not escape wicked suggestions from the adversary. I could not help thinking of Job, when he was in the hour of affliction, and it seemed to him as though he must sink. Satan took the opportunity to make wicked suggestions to him, that he might escape all this; so it was with me; he thought he could get me out of this trouble if I would but listen to him. But by the grace of God I did not, I believe. God was the same friend to me then that he ever was, and I determined to stand up for him, let the consequences be what they might. Since then I have enjoyed the presence of God more than I ever have before for a number of years.

When I think for a few moments of the goodness of God, my mind is so full I feel as though I wanted everybody to know it. O, the inestimable goodness of God, that he should give his only Son to die that we might live. O, the beauty there is in the thought of the resurrection of the dead! When the trump of God shall sound, the dead will hear his voice, and come forth in newness of life, to live forever in the presence of God. I am longing for Jesus to come, that he will put an end to sin. I am sick of this vile world.

Great Falls, N. H.

From Bro. W. D. Loveland.

Dear Brn.:—I too would add my testimony to the many which appear in the Crisis, of my strong and constantly increasing faith in the near approach of our Lord and Savior.

When the Herzegovinian insurrection first broke out, I was asked what I thought of it. I said, "God is in it, and it never will cease till Turkey goes down." Each succeeding report tends to strengthen that belief, and that we are on the eve of the last great battle. How strange it seems that, just before us is that great resurrection, of which Ezekiel's vision of dry bones was but a type.

Our little band here are looking for that "last lovely morning" with longing hearts. We are very weak in point of numbers, but, thank God, we have strong faith. Our little church has passed through severe trials, which have resulted in a winnowing of our congregation. Many have "gone back, and walk no more with us." Whether they still keep the faith we cannot tell, but they "come not to our assemblies."

Since Eld. Bateman left us a year ago we have had no regular Advent preaching; but Bro. Lewis, a methodist, and a beloved brother in the faith, preaches for us. He believes as strongly as we in "the immediate coming," and does not hide his light. But above all we have reason to thank the Lord, that, notwithstanding the trials we have suffered, he has not left us desolate. We have two meetings on the Lord's day, and two during the week, and God meets with us, bless his name! and we are adding to our numbers such as we hope shall be saved.

Brethren, pray for us, that we may withstand all the fiery darts of the adversary, and having done all, stand.

Lockport, N. Y.

From Bro. Chas. Carman.

Editors Crisis:—I thought that a few lines from the West might be of interest to some of your Eastern readers.

Yesterday (Dec. 12th) I rode thirty miles on mule-back across the cold, bleak prairie, and preached twice to a people who have never heard our faith preached until two months ago. I have endeavored to teach them the great Bible truths, as taught by our people. Several say their faith in the old theological notions has been so shaken that they will have to give it up, although they have believed that way for many long years.

They are starving for the truth. They have no books or tracts to help them, and I am not able to buy and give away. Will some of our Eastern readers send some second-hand tracts and books to my address? or, if they will send large packages by express, I will pay charges.

Brethren and sisters in the blessed hope, do not be ashamed to send a book or tract because it is a little worn. I will guarantee they will be carefully distributed.

I will tell you what good one stray tract has done. Bro. Haines, the blind preacher, passed through our town some seven years ago, and gave one or two away. One fell into good hands, and to-day four preachers are telling the good news of the soon coming kingdom, and believers can be counted by the hundred, as a result. Just send any publications which may help these dear people to search out those great truths that have been hidden, though read daily, and you will have the prayers of a grateful people.

Hamburg, Iowa.

From Bro. C. H. Williams.

Dear Editors:—As I have not been heard from through the Crisis in some time, and many of the Lord's children wishing to know of my welfare and labors in the gospel, I thought I would write briefly of the same.

My work has been in various places in this State, visiting both new and old fields, as the Lord has directed. His blessing has been upon me, and I have seen my feeble efforts attended with a marked degree of success. The truth is spreading in all this region and accomplishing its aggressive work, while a few are made acquainted with its saving power, and rejoice in the pardoning love of Jesus.

I am so glad we have the gospel to draw the dividing line, and I am fearful that many professors of religion who go to God's house to amuse themselves with fairs, festivals, Christmas trees, and many other foolish things, will ultimately find themselves on the left hand. There are a few humble, devoted christians, who keep unspotted from the world. May God help them to do just right. My health is poor, but I mean to work while the Lord permits, that salvation may be mine when Jesus comes.

West Martinsburg, Lewis Co., N. Y.

From Bro. J. H. F. Varney.

Dear Brn.:—Please allow me to say to the readers of "our paper" that, by the blessing of God, my health is slowly but steadily improving. I can sit up an hour at a time, and walk fifteen minutes three or four times a day. Last Sunday I went out of doors for the first time (except once or twice) for more than a year. As I was joyously bathing in God's pure air and golden sunshine, how I wished that Sr. Weaver and other afflicted ones could enjoy the same blessed privilege.

But, saint of God, cheer up! Earth's night of pain and sorrow is almost past, and soon the morn of eternal blessedness and joy shall burst upon thee. Very soon shall thy suffering frame be clothed with immortality. Then shalt thou spring from thy couch of suffering, and go forth into an atmosphere and sunshine infinitely more sweet and golden than what earth now enjoys. Glory to God! that he has made it possible for us all to be there.

WHAT CHRIST HAS DONE AND PROMISED TO DO FOR ME.

B. C. CRABTREE.

I was a sinner—was lost. Christ found me, and said, I have come to save them that were lost. He took me out of the dark pathway of sin, and placed my feet in a narrow path, and he tells me to walk therein, and I shall find joy and peace to my sin-sick soul.

Christ sought me when I was wandering from the fold of God, and these loving words came from his lips, Wanderer, come home.

I was weary and oppressed. Christ said to me, I will bear your burden. I surrendered all to him, and he lovingly received me and my burden, and I am walking by his side, and he watches over me and leads me into green fields and beside the still waters. If I stumble he is ready to assist me, encourages me onward, and tells me of the prize which awaits every one who will endure.

I bless the Master's name for his keeping power. He found me, he keeps me, and he will by-and-by crown me with life eternal in his everlasting kingdom. He tells me not to look back, but to look forward, for in a little while the Master is coming,—coming to raise the dead, renew the earth, reward his people, set up his eternal kingdom under the whole heavens,—coming to execute judgment and take vengeance on all that know not God.

I am resting to-day in the rifted rock. My feet are upon the sure foundation. I am waiting, simply waiting for that better and brighter day soon to dawn. Christ to me is all; worlds like this nothing. Christ for me! Christ for me!

CONFERENCE REPORT.

In the absence of the President, C. C. Ramsay, the second quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference was called to order by the Secretary, Saturday, P. M., Dec. 11th, 1875. Opened by prayer by Bro. J. Ridley, who, with F. H. Kenny, was invited to participate with us.

On motion, F. H. Kenny was elected President, pro tem. Brn. Jasper Ingalls and C. A. Walker were received as delegates from the New Hartford Church. Remarks and suggestions were made by P. S. W. Deyo with reference to awakening an interest among the people on the necessities of the cause. After remarks and recommendations by different brethren, a resolution was drawn up as follows:

Resolved, That we recommend to the Annual Conference the propriety of appointing an Evangelist to visit the different churches, for the purpose of awakening an interest among them in regard to the necessities of the cause. This is a move in the right direction, and should be nobly seconded by the brethren every where.

The question of purchasing a new tent to go into the mission field was brought up, and the following resolution passed.

Whereas, The Christian Mission tent, now the property of P. S. W. Deyo, is getting old, and needs to be replaced by a new one, therefore, Resolved, that we, as a Quarterly Conference, approve of the endeavors of Bro. Deyo in obtaining subscriptions for that purpose. On motion adjourned.

I. A. MARSH, Sec.

DEDICATION.

The Chapel at St. Johnsbury, Vt., was dedicated to the Lord Dec. 16th, 1875. Bro. Jas. Hemenway was with us, and preached the dedicatory sermon. The occasion was a pleasant one. Some of our brethren and sisters were present from abroad. Elders Wright and Wheeler assisted in the dedicatorial services, also a Baptist minister of this place. Meetings were continued during the week and over the Lord's day. We listened to one discourse from Bro. Wheeler, Bro. J. Hemenway doing the rest of the preaching. There was no move on the part of the unconverted; but we trust seed was sown which will take root and bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

We have a church numbering forty-eight members, and among them are some good workers. I have had the watch-care over them for a year, and shall conclude my labors as soon as they can find a good pastor, who will settle among them, and labor to build them up in the faith of Christ.

M. A. POTTER.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Dear Brethren:—I desire to contradict the assertions that are in circulation, and seem to be credited by my ministering brethren, that I am connected with brethren who are talking in tongues, washing feet, etc. I have been with those brethren out of a pure motive, to save, if possible, some whom I think are honest in this matter; and so have curtailed my influence and injured my reputation. But I want it distinctly understood by all that I do not believe in their fanaticism, and unscriptural practices—of talking in tongues, trine immersion, holy kissing, etc.

I believe in whatever savors of God and his Word.

Hoping this will satisfy those who have doubted my soundness of faith, I remain your Bro. in Christ, D. EASTMAN.

Canaan. N. H., Dec. 20th, 1875.

CONFESS.—It is always safe to confess sin. Even when unconscious of it, our motives may be mixed with selfishnsss, pride, vanity, or other carnal inpulses. We may not perceive the adulteration, though God does. His eyes are sharper than ours. How often children esteem their work perfect, when more experienced eyes know it full of defects. They have done the best they could, done remarkably well for them, but their work must be done over, because imperfect. So christians of small experience do well for them, but those of higher attainments know that their service is imperfect. Does not the Lord perceive equal defects in the lives of the ripest saints. So we may safely decide that our best days are far below God's standard of purity, and that "forgive us our trespasses," is a fit sentence in our every evening and morning prayer.

Obituaries.

STEVENS. At Loudon, N. H., Dec. 1st, 1875, Bro. Jairus H. Stevens, aged eighty years, seven months.

Many persons in various parts of New Hampshire who have listened with pleasure and profit to the preaching of this aged brother, will be interested to know of his being gathered as a shock of corn fully ripe, ready for the Master's garner. His birthplace was Warner, where his early years were spent. At nineteen years of age, he enlisted in the service of the King Emanuel, and retired from that service only when he retired from life. Sixty-two years he fought the good fight, and having kept the faith and finished his course with honor, he rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

Bro. S. was always connected with the F. W. Baptist church, but he was a man of catholic spirit, and rejoiced in the children of the King by whatever name they might be called. He had many friends in the Advent church, and was for several years a reader of the Crisis. He was a man of singular modesty and self-forgetfulness, of a contented, thankful spirit, and of great faith in God. To him, "sufficient unto the day was the evil thereof." He sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all necessary worldly good was added unto him.

Bro. S. labored in the ministry in Newport, Wilmot, Warner, Sutton, Oxford, and other towns in that part of the State, besides laboring a year or more in Loudon, where his home was for many years. May his many friends imitate his example, and partake of his reward. D. S. HIBBARD, WELCH. At Cairo, Ill., Dec. 10th, 1875, Bro. Richard Welch, aged twenty-seven years.

It was about two years ago that Bro. Welch confessed his faith in his Savior, his resolution to follow and obey him, and his hope of a resurrection unto eternal life, by being buried with Christ in baptism, and arising to walk in newness of life. He was a firm believer in the speedy personal advent of the Savior, and kindred truths, and never shrank from confessing his faith before men, and his life was a practical illustration of the apostle's description of the Thessalonian church—"Ye turned from idols to serve the living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." His consistent life won him the esteem of all with whom he was associated. Before he died, he expressed his resignation to the will of God, and his faith of an entrance into the everlasting kingdom at the resurrection. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn their loss, whom we commend to the care of Him who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb.

Asleep in Jesus, soon to rise
When the last trump shall rend the skies;
Then burst the fetters of the tomb,
To wake in full, immortal bloom

Services by the writer, from John 11: 25.

THEO. S. THOMASSON.

GESSER. In Dix Island, May 11th, 1875, Sr. Sarah Boyd, wife of Fred. Gesser, aged thirty-eight years.

We are lonely and sad. We deeply feel our loss, because we know her worth. Her work is done, and she is sweetly sleeping in Jesus. She was rich in good works, in faith, in hope, in charity. We have buried our sister, but not our sorrow. Our cup of affliction is full to the brim. But Christ says, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." It is enough. We will dry our tears, follow in her footsteps, and live with her through a never ending eternity of peace.

She has laid down to rest till the morning,
Where storm blasts of time never sweep;
'Mid life's conflicts and toils she grew weary,
So He gave his beloved one sleep.

She has lain down to rest 'mid earth's shadow,
But oh, when the morning shall break,
And the Lifegiver comes for his chosen,
With joy, yea, with singing she 'll wake.

SARAH C. CLARK.

MARTIN. In Portsmouth, N. H., Nov. 29th, 1875, Mrs. Sarah, wife of Joseph L. Martin, aged sixty-six years.

A long struggle, and deeply painful, with stone cancer in the breast, which defied both medical and surgical treatment, terminated as above. Sister M., though a member of the Christian church, was deeply in sympathy with our sentiments. Her religion was illustrated by acts of christian kindness through all the neighborhood, among those afflicted or who needed a helper. She was a devoted wife, a kind mother, a valued neighbor. May God sustain the stricken husband and bereaved daughters. The pastor of the Christian church assisted at the funeral. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

E. OWEN.

MURPHY. In Barnstead, N. H., Nov. 16th, 1875, Dr. Frank W. Murphy, aged thirty years, leaving a father and mother, brothers and sisters, and a large circle of friends to mourn that one so gifted and so highly esteemed should die so soon.

Of him it may be said—"From a child thou hast kuown the Scriptures." His last utterance to loved ones who bent o'er his wasted form was—"I love Jesus. I shall live again." Words of consolation were administered by the writer to the family on the funeral occasion. A. ROSS.

SHORTRIDGE. In Brookfield, N. H., Dec. 1st, 1875, after several years of suffering, our father, James N. Shortridge, aged seventy-six years.

His work is done, and he rests in hope of eternal life. When He who is our life shall appear in his kingdom, we expect to meet our dear father again. May God bless us in our sorrows is my prayer. Words of comfort were spoken from Job 14: 10, by Joseph Spinney.

FRANK SHORTRIDGE.

NEWTON. In West Boylston, Mass., Dec. 13th, 1875, Dana Newton, aged ninety-three years and six months.

Words of comfort by the writer from 1 Cor. 15: 37. H. H. TUCKER.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

CRIME.—We find in our exchanges more and more murders, of the most shocking, causeless and inhuman nature, every week. Persons of a timid nature and weak nerves are ceasing to read the dailies on account of their record of awful crimes. The Boston Journal of this morning, Dec. 27, contains we think the darkest catalogue of crime that we have ever seen crowded into one day. Restraint is evidently being taken off from men's evil passions, preparatory to the scene when every man's sword shall be against his brother. J. C.

Montreal, Dec. 17. This forenoon about one thousand unemployed people, mostly French Canadians, assembled in front of the City Hall, where they remained for some time in an excited state.

At 3 P. M. a disorderly throng of over 2000 surrounded the City Hall, and despite the large body of police the mob attacked a beer wagon and drank its contents. A bread wagon was then cleaned out. Ten minutes later a fight took place, and order was restored with difficulty. The Alderman locked up the various departments, and discussed the propriety of reading the riot act.

New York, Dec. 24. A Bremen paper contains the following: "We have had news from Abyssinia. An expedition of about 2000 men, sent by the Khedive under the command of Gen Arendrop, a Dane, to subjugate Abyssinia, was drawn into an ambush and nearly every man slaughtered.

Gen. Arendrop Ranf Pasha, a nephew of Nubar Pasha, and many other officers, were literally hacked to pieces, their heads stuck on spears before the Abyssinian tents, and their bodies left to the wild beasts. MacKillop Pasha is said to be alive and a prisoner.

Of Col. Routh, the American, nothing is known and only one officer, Schmeitzer, escaped. An expedition comprising 12,000 men, embracing infantry, cavalry and artillery, is to set out from Cairo without delay, and will be joined by every American officer in the Egyptian service, including Col. Stone.

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 17. Two men named Parks and Coy, of West Brimfield, were killed by an express train at Palmer this evening. A frieght train in the opposite direction hid thieir view, and they drove upon the track just before the locomotive.

New York, Dec. 17. Late Panama dates state that the election riot in Huanta, Peru, resulted in twenty deaths and several more wounded.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, Dec. 18. A Constantinople dispatch says the Porte is putting its naval equipments in first-class condition. Numerous changes have also been made in the army, more especially in the artillery, with a view to greater efficiency in active service. Recruiting is actively engaged in to fill the levy just issued for 100,000 troops.

NAPLES, Dec. 21. Mount Vesuvius is in an eruptive condition. There is a gradual increase of fire and smoke. The instruments in the observatory are in motion, and Professor Palmieri predicts a long period of eruption.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 16. A frightful pit explosion occurred at Mons to-day, killing one hundred and ten workmen outright and injuring many others.

From Constantinople we learn by telegraph that a severe shock of earthquake was felt there on Monday night, and a violent tempest raged also at Valona. Later particulars are expected with anxiety, as considerable damage is said to have been caused.

The winter is severe in Austria. A Vienna telegram of the 6th inst. says: "Snow has been falling incessantly. The trains to Italy and Hungary are stopped and the stations temporarily closed. Goods traffic is entirely suspended on four lines. Here in Vienna the police are taking special precautions to prevent accidents from the snow in the streets. In some of the country districts the snow is nine feet in depth."

Notice—Baptism, or Rantism.

Orders for this work are coming in, but in order to ensure its publication, it will be necessary that they pour in sufficiently to warrant the cost of publishing an edition without loss, which cannot be afforded. The work will be of interest, I trust, as old ground will be re-explored in a manner to bring out all the truth we can discover, and new ground not yet much explored will be dug over for the sake of discovering the whole truth. It is as yet but little known what Rantism is, or what its relation is to Baptism, if any, and specially to the great atonement. Let all who would like the work, and will be willing to encourage its publication, send on their orders by postal card to me, to RICHMOND, PROV. QUE., CANADA. The work will be afforded as cheaply as possible. Please send on your orders, brethren and sisters. L. C. MCKINSTRY.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.
BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.
Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a book of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul.—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We are all out of the pamphlet edition of this valuable work, but have a supply nicely bound in cloth, which, through the liberality of Dr. Ives, we are able to sell at a small advance in price over that of the cheap edition, as follows: Single copy, by mail, 30 cts.; per dozen, $3.00; by express, $2.50 per dozen. CHRISTMAS HYMN.

H. H. HALL.

"What radiant light is this we see
O'er Bethlehem's plains to night?
What glorious forms, in heavenly glee,
Arrayed in garments bright?"

The shepherds list with anxious fears,
In silence most profound;
The angel of the Lord appears!
And glory shines around.

"Fear not:—most joyful news from heaven—
A king for all the earth!
To every people shall be given
The tidings of his birth."

"Behold!"—the angel doth declare—
"This day is born to you,
In David's crowded city near,
The Christ, Messiah true."

"Glory to God!"—the angels sing—
"On earth is peace again;
Glad tidings of good will we bring
To fallen sinful men."

All hail, the Prince of life and light!
Whose healing beams shall shine
Till earth in Eden—splendor bright,
Shall be a holy shrine.

"Welcome, welcome, the Prince of earth,"
Let all the earth now sing;
The royal diadem bring forth,
And crown him Lord and King.

THE OLD COVENANT.

R. W. WILSON.

My attention has recently been called to a sermon written by J. W. Wagner on the Law of God, No. 7. The law, he claims, is the ten commandments. He says, "The law of the Lord is perfect." Ps. 19: 7. "Perfection in moral matters cannot be improved. Were the law less than perfect, it could not be a rule of holiness. Being perfect, it cannot be changed without making it imperfect, nor can it be abolished without abolishing perfection and the rule of holiness."

There is one word in the marginal reading of this text which completely spoils this kind of reasoning. According to that, it is "the doctrine of the Lord is perfect," having reference to God's Word in general, or as a whole. In the Bible we read of the "doctrines of men," and the "doctrine of devils," but when God speaks of his Word, he saith not in the plural, but in the singular—doctrine. It is "perfect, converting the soul"; it is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." But not so with the old covenant, the ten commandments, which was not perfect. "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second." Heb. 8: 7. "For if there there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe." Gal. 3: 21, 22.

God has never justified a single soul on account of obedience to the ten commandments. He has never placed himself in debt to any of his creatures. There is but one way possible for him to justify fallen men, which is gratuitously, by faith. "For what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." Rom. 4: 3–5. "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law, for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Gal. 2: 16.

Eld. Wagner says further: "What a monstrous absurdity to suppose, in the face of Scripture and reason, that a law which defines the whole duty of a moral agent should for any cause be abolished." But in the face of Scripture and reason, we find that the Decalogue does not define the whole duty of a moral agent, for the first and greatest commandments relating to morality are not found in the ten commandments. One of the ancient scribes having heard the Pharisees reasoning with Jesus, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, "Which is the first commandment of all? And Jesus answered him, The first of all commandments is, Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these." Mark 12: 28–31. Being first in point of importance and comprehensiveness, involving more that concerns the moral character of man than any other, these are first in point of completeness and perfection; for "love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. 13: 10. Moreover, the command to believe is another of God's great commandments. "This is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ." 1 John 3: 23. "Have faith in God," is the command of Jesus; and Paul said that "without faith it is impossible to please him." The faith enjoined here is heart faith, which is always saving.

Faith has received from Christ the highest commendations of any gift, it being one of the chief graces. It honors and exalts God, and enables man to have humble views of himself and his doing. "Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay, but by the law of faith." Faith is the root of all true obedience to God. It is faith which unites us to Christ, making us one with him, and partakers of all the benefits accruing from his life and his death. By faith we are made God's adopted children. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3: 26. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John 1: 12. "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." Rom. 8: 17.

Eld. J. N. Andrews has said, in his History of the Sabbath, page 71—"He [Christ] assigned to the law of God its just place; he laid down the keeping of the commandments as the condition of eternal life." Surely such a statement as this indicates a great misapprehension of the truth of the gospel. It stands in direct opposition to the general tenor of Scripture on this point; in fact, if there is one truth which is revealed with greater clearness than another it is this, that we are saved, not by our doing, but solely by faith in what Christ has done for us. "But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." (John 20: 31.) "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 14–16.) It is very true that a christian is to be careful to maintain good works, but not in order to be saved, but because he is saved. Concluded next week.

HOW TO RETAIN ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION.

Supposing, dear reader, that you now possess the exalted happiness, the perfect humility, perfect love, and the witness of the Holy Spirit that you are fully saved from all sin. How blessed is your estate, how much cause for gratitude. But alas! that this blessing may be lost. But how may you keep it?

1. You must cherish the spirit of watchfulness. Holiness is like a garden without weeds; but, if you do not watch, Satan will sow tares. It is like a well regulated house; still it requires constant care to keep it in order. It is like a beautiful white robe, that may soon be spotted and defiled in this filthy world. Thank God! the blood of Jesus Christ, his son, cleanseth, moment by moment, from all sin. It can cleanse and keep us clean. Holiness is like a sharp-edged instrument that will be blunted without much care. It is like a well-defended city, with the enemies all outside, but every avenue must be constantly guarded.

Watch your thoughts; an evil thought may lead to an unholy desire, and this to a sinful volition, and sin is committed, and a wounded conscience and a blushing face leave sad cause for repentance. Watch the first ruffle of your feelings, and stay your mind at once on God. Watch the first temptation to speak an angry, fretful, or peevish word, for all these little things have a great influence. "Trifles make perfection, but perfection is no trifle."

(2) Cultivate a spirit of faith. This implies that you will guard against every temptation to doubt. Satan may say the blessing is too good for you, too great for you to enjoy, that many older professors than you have never professed such a blessing. Resist the temptation. Cast yourself anew at the feet of Jesus, and look up with simple faith into his loving face, and say, I do believe. Jesus saves me, saves me now. Lady Maxwell says: "The Lord teaches me that it is by simple faith alone that I can either obtain, retain, or increase with regard to any gospel blessing.

(3) Your works must accord with your faith. Faith without works is dead, being alone. You must hold yourself ready for any post of duty, in any part of the world, for any portion of time. In great things or in small you will do the will of God, even in eating and drinking. You will find here a full opportunity for the exercise of self-denial. Other professors may yield to indulgence in dress, etc., but you must rigidly deny self. Wesley says, "Be exemplary in all things, particularly in outward things, as in dress, in little things, in laying out your money, avoiding all needless expense." Fill up your whole life with labor for Jesus. Keep yourself fully engaged doing good, and so your works will help your faith. Read 1 John 3: 20–22. Study its blessed and significant meaning.

(4) Live as in the presence of God. "Thou God seest me," ever kept in mind will do much toward keeping you from falling. Walk and talk with God. Often spend an hour in sweetest fellowship with God in your closet. This will give you a richer realization of the divine presence, and a power to reflect the divine image upon the gainsaying world.

(5) You cannot maintain this blessed state until you make a timely and prudent profession of it. Tell the truth—the whole truth. Be not afraid to use Bible language. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "Perfect love casteth out fear." In deep humiliation of soul, and with a single eye to his glory, publish this fulness to the world. Still the loudest profession of holiness is the daily deportment, the godly walk, the deadness to the world in its spirit and customs.

(6) Seek after more and more of the mind of Christ. You must grow in holiness, or decline in holiness. If you try to stand still you will go back. It is your blessed privilege to be "changed from glory into glory,"

"Till in heaven you take your place—
Till you cast your crowns before him,
Lost in wonder, love and praise."

(7) You must daily renew your consecration. Lay your all upon the altar. "That sanctifieth the gift." Still say from your heart,

"High heaven that heard the solemn vow,
That vow renewed shall daily hear;
Till in life's latest hour I bow,
And bless in death a bond so dear."

(8) You must labor to diffuse this blessing; to persuade others to embrace it. This you will do as long as you retain it. A minister once said, "a christian was like a coal of fire; he must set himself on fire, or he would go out himself." Scatter the holy fire, then, it will burn more and more.

(9) Be willing to suffer the consequences of its profession.

(10) Satan may tempt you more severely. This he did to Jesus. Thank God you need not fear.

"By all hell's host withstood,
We all hell's host o'erthrow;
And conquering them through Jesus' blood,
We on to conquer go."

(11) You may expect opposition from those who are at ease in Zion. They may say, "You are zealous overmuch;" "you make yourself peculiar;" "attract attention;" "Why not take things a little easier?" "Why make so much ado about religion?" "It will be just as well in the end."

Look out for these Laodiceans; pity them, pray for them, set fire to them, but do not follow their example, or be moved by their pleadings. Yours is indeed a peculiar state of mind and heart, and but few enjoy, or know how to appreciate it. It will make you peculiar as it did Jesus. And you must be willing to meet the opposition as he did, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again.

(12) "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."—Sel. by Mary P. Burbank.

YORK COUNTY CONFERENCE REPORT.

The York Co. Conference met in annual session at Bonny Eagle, Me., Dec. 9th, 1875, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

As there were but few present it was decided to adjourn our businesss meeting to Dec. 11th, at 9 A. M., and spend the intervening time in religious worship. During this time we had two good social meetings, and a sermon from each of the following brethren: J. K. Tripp, M. Stevens, and W. Stevens.

Dec. 11, 8, A. M. Met for business. Eld. Hill in the chair. Meeting opened in the usual manner. The Secretary, Treasurer, and Financial Committee gave in their reports, which were all accepted. The financial report showed the receipts during the year to be $36.21. Paid for tracts and Secretary's book $16.31, leaving $20.11 in the Treasury.

Voted, That the chair appoint a committee of three on nominations. G. H. Haines, J. K. Tripp, and Henry Kidlon were appointed said committee. They reported the old board entire. Their report was accepted, and each of the candidates voted in separately. Eld. J. Hill requested to be excused from serving us as President. After some hesitation his request was granted. Eld. J. Berry was then chosen in his stead. The other officers elected are C. H. Sweet, Secretary, J. Gay, Treasurer, W. H. Mitchell, J. Gay, and J. C. Libby Financial Committee.

Reports of preachers and churches were next called for, and were given in the following order: J. Hill, C. H. Sweet, M. Stevens, and J. Gay. Biddeford, Bonny Eagle, Standish and Hollis Centre.

It will be seen that our churches are still negligent about reporting themselves. We wish they would, and shall continue to pray that they may yet become more interested in our County Conference. All who reported thought they had seen some good accomplished, and they expressed a desire to continue in the work.

Voted, That a collection be taken up during each session of the Conference to replenish our Treasury.

Voted, That we employ an Evangelist during the next three months, to labor in new fields, and visit destitute churches in York Co. and vicinity; and that we request brethren and friends in the places visited to contribute to his support as they may be able.

Voted, That we leave it with our Financial Committee to decide how much shall be paid this Evangelist out of the Conference Treasury.

C. H. Sweet of Steep Falls Me., was chosen said Evangelist. All who desire his labors are requested to correspond with him.

A vote of thanks was given the retiring officers for their faithfulness in the discharge of their duties. The church and people of Bonny Eagle were thanked for their courtesy and hospitality.

Voted, That we adjourn to meet the first Thursday in March next, at 2 P. M., at such a place as our President may select.

During Saturday and Sunday we were favored with good preaching by J. Gay, J Hill, S. C. Lowe, and M. Stevens. We felt that the Lord was with us throughout, aiding us in the discharge of our duties, and refreshing our weary hearts.

C. H. SWEET, Sec.

FEELING, OR FAITH.

"I feel that God loves me." "I feel that my sins are forgiven." "I feel that the blood cleanses me from all unrighteousness." Such and kindred expressions are constantly heard in meetings for testimony among christians.

But are our feelings any test of his love, or that he has forgiven and cleansed us? And if we depend on them for the evidence of these things, are we not walking by sight? Yet many are continually pledging themselves by the rule of their feelings. A brother's emotions are particularly lively to-day, and he straightway judges himself in good spiritual condition; but to-morrow, his emotions subsiding, he concludes himself forsaken, unforgiven and uncleansed. Now nothing is more deceitful than feeling. It frequently promises a long and vigorous life to one who in ten minutes is a corpse. Upon another it pronounces the sentence of death, to be executed in twenty seconds, who survives twenty years.

Is it not for this reason that the Scriptures nowhere say, "He that feeleth and is baptized shall be saved?" Whatever the reason is, the Scriptures tells us the truth, and demand that we believe it. On the testimony of his word alone we believe that he loves us, forgives us our sins and cleanses us from all unrighteousness. Faith turns things unseen into substances. It did so for the mighty men of old. And most wonderfully real to them were the things they believed; for, though hid from mortal vision, they "embraced them." And it was through this faith that they arrived at knowledge. "I know that my Redeemer liveth," is not the weak whisper of a fleeting emotion, but the mighty voice of an abiding faith.

We do not write to condemn emotion; we only want to get it in its right place. For such a faith as is above spoken of will be followed by emotion as surely as refreshing rain succeeds the summer cloud. Wave after wave of holy rapture will roll over such a believing soul; yea, it shall even bathe in a sea of excellent glory. But we should not make the sad mistake of seeking first emotion, hoping faith will be its child. Let us learn from one qualified to speak in such a matter, who said: "I believed to see."—Ex.

BUT WHEN?

Reader, I dare say you mean one day to be a decidedly religious man. You think it quite right to be a pious person. But when is this to be? I say again, When?

Are you waiting till you are sick? Surely you will not tell me that is a convenient season. When your body is racked with pain, when your mind is distracted with all kinds of anxious thoughts, when calm reflection is almost impossible, is this a time for beginning the mighty work of acquaintance with God? Do not talk so.

Are you waiting till you are old? Surely you have not considered what you say. You will serve God when your members are worn out and decayed, and your hands unfit to work? You will go to him when your mind is weak and your memory failing? You will give up the world when you cannot keep it? Is this your plan? Beware lest you insult God.

Are you waiting till you have leisure? And when do you expect to have more time than you have now? Every year you live seems shorter than the last; you find more to think of, or to do, and less power and opportunity to do it. And after all you know not whether you may live to see another year. Boast not yourself of to-morrow—now is the time.

Are you waiting till your heart is perfectly fit and ready? That will never be. It will always be corrupt and sinful—a bubbling fountain, full of evil. You will never make it like a pure white sheet of paper, that you can take to Jesus and say, "Here I am, Lord, ready to have thy law written on my heart." Delay not. Better begin as you are.

Oh, lingering reader, are not your excuses broken reeds? Be honest; confess the truth. You have no good reason for waiting. Take the advice I give you. Resolve this day to wait no longer. Begin at once to seek God. Repent of your sins. Break off your evil habits. Believe on Christ and be saved.—N. Y. Witness.

THE STORM.

I saw a storm cloud rising,
The sky was overcast,
And fitful gusts of wind bespoke
The coming of the blast.

I heard the muttering thunder,
And saw the lightning play,
And beasts and fowls with one consent
Hid from the storm away.

I saw large rain drops falling,
As if the heavens wept,
And hail stones beat upon the ground,
As on the tempest swept.

'Twas fearful to be gazing
Upon the gathering gloom,
And I looked to God in thankfulness
For the shelter of my home.

But, oh! a storm more dreadful,
Of vengeance long delayed,
Is soon to burst upon the earth,
When wrongs shall be repaid.

The heavens are gathering blackness,
The threatening storm-clouds lower;
All things bespeak the judgment near,
And nature's final hour.

Behold the angry nations,
Now moved with dreadful fear,
Are waking up the mighty men,—
They see the crisis near.

The saint with calm composure
Looks on these scenes so dark;
His life is hid with Christ in God,
He's safe within the ark.

He sees the tempest coming,
He dares the earthquake shock,
For his house, unmoved by winds and waves,
Is founded on the rock.

He looks beyond those terrors,
To the day of sweet release;
For he knows they usher in the reign
Of Christ the Prince of peace.

He sees in every movement
The march of power divine,
And men while acting for themselves,
Fill up his great design.

MAINE CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Annual Session of the Second Advent Christian Conference of Maine convened according to appointment in Portland, Nov. 30th, 1875, at 7½ P. M. Elder Jesse Gay preached the opening discourse from Matt. 18: 20—"For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." This was a timely and excellent sermon, and made a good impression on the hearers. Dec. 1st. Met at 9 o'clock A. M. After prayer, Conference was called to order by the President for business. I. C. Wellcome was chosen Secretary pro tem. Elds. S. K. Partridge, J. Gay, and J. Hill, were chosen as a committee to prepare and present business to the Conference.

Last year's Conference Report was read and approved. Conference was permanently organized by choice of George Humphrey, President; S. K. Partridge, Vice President; I. C. Wellcome, Secretary. Elder E. A. Stockman was invited to unite with the Conference, but declined because he had not yet taken a dismissal from the New Hampshire Conference.

Voted, To invite Elder E. A. Stockman, Elder E. S. Moulton, and all other ministers in attendance, to unite with us in our deliberations. Delegates from the Portland church, Peter Johnson, Geo. Humphrey, H. C. Freeman, D. F. Scamman; Biddeford, J. C. Libby, J. B. Richards; Lewiston, Jas. Tracy.

Business Committee reported.

Treasurer's Report called for. He wished it postponed.

Mission and Tract Agent's Reports called for. Read. Both Reports were tabled until to-morrow, hoping Eastern brethren might arrive. Choice of other officers deferred.

Voted, To so change Art. 3d of the Constitution as to read, "The second Tuesday in June," instead of "October," for the meeting of the Conference hereafter. Adjourned to meet at 3½ P. M.

At 2½ P. M., Eld. S. K. Partridge preached a good discourse from Matt. 22: 42—"What think ye of Christ?"

At 3½ o'clock, Conference entered upon business. After some discussion relating to the forthcoming Convention of the A. C. Association, at Worcester, Mass., and the importance of attending it, the following was voted:—

Resolved, That our churches be urgently requested to send delegates to the A. C. Association to be held at Worcester, Mass., and that our preachers be urged to attend the same.

Resolved. That all our preachers be requested to call the attention of the churches to this subject next Sunday. Adjourned to 9 o'clock to-morrow.

7½ P. M. A card was received from Bro. H. A. Mitchell to the President of the Conference, stating that his father, Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell, was very sick with diphtheria, at his house. Prayers were offered for his restoration, after which Eld. E. S. Moulton preached from Luke 15: 18—"I will arise and go to my father."

Dec. 2nd, met at 9 o'clock. After prayer, the President called Conference to business. The news of the illness of Bro. Mitchell being communicated to Conference, they passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our beloved brother, the recent efficient and faithful Secretary of this Conference, in his present painful illness; and we will remember him and his family in special prayer, and trust that God will be pleased to speedily restore him to health, and to his needful service in this body, and the church at large.

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to forward at once a copy of the above resolution to Bro. Mitchell and his family.

Eld. S. K. Partridge presented a request for Jesse Partridge to come before the Conference to make a confession. Voted, to allow him to do so.

Bro. Jesse Partridge now made a confession to the Conference of wrongs, in which he acknowledged the correctness and propriety of the Report of the last Council held on his case several years since, and asked forgiveness for his course. Voted unanimously, to forgive him.

The Treasurer's Report was next taken from the table, read and adopted, and incorporated into the Mission and Tract Agent's Report by permission. The Mission and Tract Agent's Report was now taken from the table, read, and passed a searching inquiry and criticism by Bro. S. K. Partridge, in behalf and in consequence of certain uninformed brethren East, who wish to know where their money is expended, they having been misinformed on the subject. Adjourned to 3½ o'clock, to hear reports from churches.

At 2½ o'clock, Eld. Jere. Hill preached a stirring sermon from Jonah 2: 8, 9—"They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy. But I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving. I will pay that that I have vowed." This was followed by several exhortations.

At 3½ o'clock, Conference was called to order to hear reports from ministers and delegates. Reports were made by Elds. S. K. Partridge, C. Goud, E. M. Haggett, J. Gay, Jere. Hill, I. C. Wellcome. By delegates, J. C. Libby, Jas. Tracy, Geo. Humphrey, Peter Johnson. These reports are too lengthy to record here. They were generally very encouraging. Souls have been converted in Palermo, Dexter, Friendship, Sabattis, Lewiston, Biddeford, Buxton, Harrison, Dayton, and several other towns. The meetings improved, and believers increased in numbers in several other towns. Many are anxious to hear the gospel of the kingdom and news of Christ's soon coming. Adjourned to 9 o'clock to-morrow.

7½ o'clock P. M. I. C. Wellcome preached from Rev. 21: 7—"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my Son." This was followed by several stirring testimonies.

Dec. 3d. Met at 9 o'clock. After prayer, Conference was called to business. Mission and Tract Agent's Report being under discussion when Conference adjourned yesterday A. M., it was now resumed, and after examination and explanations, was submitted as follows:—

Mission and Tract Agent's Report.

Beloved Brethren:—It becomes my duty to report to you the work you have the past year entrusted to my care. As a tent committee, we have found the same difficulty as in former years; could not procure men suited to the work of managing tent meetings only a limited part of the time; therefore I have used a large proportion of the money I collected in the purchase and distribution of tracts. Cash in the treasury at last Conference, $27.88. Cash collected by Treasurer, Agent, and Buxton tent-meeting, $222.44. Total, $250.32. Cash paid for tracts (at cost), circulated, with postage, $148.90. Cash paid Eld. H. D. Reed, tent labors and expenses, $50.28. Eld. R. R. York's fares and labors at Buxton tent, $10. Cash delivered, by request, to Eld. Jeremiah Carr, $34.50. Cash in the treasury, $6.64. Total, $250.32. We have circulated $95.05 worth of these tracts in Maine, and $53.85 worth in Kansas, Ala., Tenn., Ga., N. C., Mo., Va., Mich., P. Q., Canada, and the White Mountains.

We think it advisable to also state that, of the total sum collected, $97 of it came from those who reside East of the Kennebec, and pledged at Pittsfield Campmeeting in 1874. Of this sum we gave into the hands of Eld. J. Carr $34.50, by request of himself and others of the Pittsfield Campmeeting Committee, in Sept., 1875. The balance, $62.50, went into the treasury, and we circulated tracts during the year, east of the Kennebec, $37.55. We held one tent meeting in Buxton, which continued three weeks with excellent results. Since the campmeetings, the brethren East have held meetings with the Mission tent, in Unity, and in Frankfort, but as no reports have been given, we cannot report here. Respectfully submitted. I. C. WELLCOME.

Voted, To adopt the above report. Eld. S. K. Partridge then offered the following:

Resolved, That the course of the Mission and Tract Agent the past year has been a wise and judicious one, and the best that could have been taken for the interest of the Second Advent cause in this State and elsewhere. Unanimously adopted.

Bro. R. R. York presented a paper to the Conference, signed by Bro. Jere. Carr, in which it is stated that Brn. Carr and O. S. French have collected on pledges to the Maine Mission fund, in 1874, the sum of $42.50, and expended the same in mission work East. As Conference could not recognize any such collection and expenditure, it was voted to lay it on the table.

Eld. R. R. York was then chosen Treasurer. Eld. I. C. Wellcome was chosen Mission and Tract Agent, but positively declined to accept. Eld. Jesse Gay was chosen and declined. Eld. S. K. Partridge was chosen and declined. Eld. F. A. Baker, of Levant, was finally chosen. For Executive Board, Jeremiah Carr, Jesse Gay, and Jared Whitman, were chosen.

For Tent and Mission Board, I. C. Wellcome, H. C. Freeman, O. S. French, H. G. Smiley, Wm. Clark, H. S. Mitchell, H. B. Eaton, were chosen. I. C. Wellcome declined to accept, and Wm. H. Mitchell was chosen in his stead. Committee on Ordination, Jesse Gay, I. C. Wellcome, and Wm. H. Mitchell, were chosen. For Auditor, S. F. Partridge was chosen.

It was voted that all money raised hereafter, in behalf of the Maine Second Advent Mission Tract Society, be paid into the treasury, and all money paid out be drawn from the treasurer, and vouchers be presented for the same.

Voted the following:—

Whereas, Elders Alonzo C. Abbott and C. H. Sweet, members of this Conference, have not attended any of its sessions since they joined it, some years ago; therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to drop the names of said members from the roll.

Voted, thanks to the President and Secretary for their services in this Conference.

A vote of thanks to the brethren and friends of Portland for their kindly entertainment of the members of this Conference, was passed.

Voted, That the Secretary prepare a record of the doings of the Conference for publication in the World's Crisis.

Voted, To adjourn to meet on the 2nd Tuesday in June, 1876, at 3 o'clock P. M., in some town east of the Kennebec, to be advertised by the President and Secretary.

P. M., 2½ o'clock. Elder S. K. Partridge preached from 2 Cor. 4: 16—"For which cause we faint not." Several exhortations and testimonies followed.

At 7 o'clock, Eld. J. Hill preached the closing sermon, from Gen. 3: 9, 10—"And the Lord God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou? And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid." This was a deeply interesting discourse. The Holy Spirit seemed to move nearly every heart present, and made it a season of great solemnity. Thus closed another of our Annual Conferences, which was a harmonious and precious season. We parted with the joyful hope of soon seeing our blessed Lord coming in glory to gather us, with all the family of the redeemed, into his eternal kingdom.

I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary.

SANCTIFIED READING.

Our reading is to the soul what our food is to the body. It is necessary to perpetuate life and repair wasted energies; and in proportion as it does this, it becomes a source of enjoyment. The mind feeds on thought just as really as the physical system receives and appropriates material substances. And the moral condition of the mind is affected for good or evil by the character of our reading matter, just as truly and perceptibly as our health and strength are modified by the nature of the diet of which we partake. As unwholesome diet debilitates, breeds disease, originates pestilence, and produces untimely mortality, so true is it that noxious literature infects and poisons the whole inward constitution. Like a breath of some malarious vapor from some reeking pool, or foul deposit of decomposing matter, it penetrates unseen, and diffuses imperceptibly through every part of our passional nature. It is a moral virus that projects itself stealthily into the affections and tastes and feelings in a manner analogous to a subtle contagion which mysteriously enters the body and communicates itself to every drop of blood and muscular fibre.

On the other hand, pure reading matter is a healthy stimulus a mental tonic, a repast of nourishing food. Truth is light, and light is full of invigoration. It not only stores and enriches the mind with ennobling ideas, but augments the intellectual forces, and puts vivacity and sprightliness into mental action. There is no freshness of thought, or originality of expression in the religious exercises of a man who does not read and think, and reading more than anything else begets thought, and calls into action the judgment and the reasoning faculty. Nor is there due sturdiness, or balance, or steady motion about a mind, the foundations of whose faith and experience are not laid in intelligence.

A soul not fed by perusing fresh forms of truth, is like a mill with an empty hopper. It acts irregularly, and to no purpose; or stops for the want of attention and replenishment of propelling force, or runs wildly on until it strikes fire and consumes itself.

Such being the pernicious effect of bad reading, and the indispensableness of good, it becomes an important question, what shall a sanctified man read, and what shall he not? This grave interrogative, it would seem, is one which is by many persons, and persons who make a profession of holiness too, last propounded, loosely considered, and never settled. It is a legitimate inference from the practice of hundreds, reputed pious, and even holy, that the most saintly character and lofty professions are consistent with the free perusal of deeply tainted literature. It is probable that the bulk of all the reading material of the christian public to-day, is composed of the miserable garbage found on the news-stands and railroads. If a thorough investigation should be made, it would develop the sad fact that this fetid matter is the staple article of all their mental food, and this piously, self-administered to professedly christian souls.

How preposterous is such a habit! A man might as well expect to be wakeful in an atmosphere of chloroform, or live and grow fat on prussic acid, as to maintain the Christ-life by partaking the miasma of our popular literature. To this cause, no doubt, the sickly condition of the great body of believers is largely traceable. Here, too, we find in part, the origin of that unstable and evanescent sanctification, which seems to collect as a sort of scum around every great revival of holiness. It is a troublesome eruption on the surface of things. It casts a shadow upon every camp-meeting—surrounds every stated meeting for the promotion of holiness with a disagreeable odor, and disparages the whole movement, as cinders and smoke detract from the pleasures of railroad travel.

But a thorough and consistent sanctification includes the expurgation of our reading matter. Indeed, what we read is an index of what we are. Animals are classified by the food they eat; as herbivorous and carnivorous, or those that feed on herbs, and those that devour flesh. So the spiritual aptitude of a christian will be indicated by the nature of the mental aliment craved by his soul.

A holy state will create holy appetites, and salvation from all sin will generate an aversion to it. If this be so, is it possible for a christian to be wholly sanctified, and yet love to read the profane, immoral, and often lascivious narrations and portrayals of our daily newspapers, or the fictitious and generally unvirtuous recitals of what is called polite literature? We are persuaded a prompt negative answer will be given; and yet it is a fact, only too well known, that the great majority of church members, and some who rank and train among the sanctified, read with avidity and gusto the tainted, popular literature of the day, and even admit sometimes to their homes, the worst papers on the holy Sabbath.

If such a religion or sanctification is not spurious, it certainly is very defective. It is an egregiously imperfect perfection. We want a holiness that will purge the library, and the centre table, and the counting room, and the satchel and traveling bag, a holiness that will bring the Bible, and good books, and religious periodicals into demand. Not books and periodicals, under the name and borrowed tracery of religion, while they are devoted chiefly to partisan, mercenary and secular ends, but literature that shall burn and blaze with the truth and spirit of Jesus.—Christian Standard.

HOME AND HEALTH.

WHEN TO LABOR AND TO REST.

There is a "time for all things," and every thing should have its own appropriate time. There is a proper time for labor as well as a proper time for rest, and it is of great importance to know these times, and to act in accordance with such knowledge.

As a general rule the best portion of the day for severe labor, either mental or physical, is before noon. The vital forces of the body and brain, after the recuperation afforded by a good night's rest, are then in their best condition for active and effective labor. The mind is clearer, fresher and more elastic, and the muscles respond to the mandates of the will with greater readiness and freedom. The experience of many will seem to contradict this. For instance, persons who, from necessity or otherwise, have formed the habit of performing their hardest labors in the afternoon or evening, will assert that they can do it easier at such time than they can in the morning, and true enough they can, so long as they are subject to that habit, but once let them discontinue that course and form the habit of doing their hardest work in the early part of the day, and they will soon perceive a decided improvement in the ease with which their work is performed, and also that they can do more in the same length of time, and with less fatigue, than they previously could later in the day.

If we look to nature for our guide, we shall find this course distinctly and unmistakably pointed out. In the vegetable world, as well as in the animal kingdom, as a rule, there is more life, activity, and vigor displayed in the early morning hours, than at any other period of the day. Plants, flowers, trees, and every form of vegetable life grow with greater rapidity at this time than at any other. Birds, insects, and other animals display far greater activity in the morning than in the afternoon. To be convinced of this, one has but to stroll through the woods and fields at early dawn, and note the constant flitting to and fro, and the ceaseless activity there displayed, and listen to the sweet strains of the feathered songsters and the busy hum of insect life.

As nature indicates the time to labor, so does she, even more plainly, point out the time for rest. In the "still hours of night" nature sleeps and rests, and so should man. Man requires on the average, when in health, about eight hours sleep out of the twenty-four, and it should all be taken during the hours of darkness. In sickness, it is often well for the patient not only to sleep all night, if he can, but also to sleep some in the day-time. In health, day sleep is unnecessary, if night sleep can be had.

No one should labor with the mind or body while suffering from pain or fatigue. Under such circumstances labor exhausts vitality with great rapidity. The universal remedy for fatigue is rest.—Herald of Health.

A GOOD TESTIMONY.

We clip the following from the Banner of Holiness.

"Jesus can save from tobacco. I have used tobacco for twenty-five years, and was a complete slave to it. The first thing in the morning, even before dressing, I would fill my mouth with it. I had used it to such an extent that my life was wasting away. I tried to leave off by using antidotes, and succeeded for a while. But I soon returned to my slavery, for I became sick when I did not use either the antidote or the tobacco. I gave up all hope of deliverance, never expecting to be free from it in this life. But the good Lord delivered me out of all my troubles.

In the spring of 1872, during a revival of religion in Astoria, Illinois, I arose one morning praising God for his great mercy and goodness to me and mine. I had first however filled my mouth with the filthy weed. Just then the Spirit said to me, "How can you praise that great and holy being with such a filthy mouth?" The conviction was instantaneous; and so was also my determination that by the grace of God I would be free. I immediately cleansed my mouth, and as soon as possible, asked the Lord to help me. And he did help me wonderfully, and totally destroyed my tobacco habit. I have never experienced any inconvenience without it, no more so than if I had never used it. I am now looking to and trusting in him, who is able and willing, and does save me from all such filthy habits.

I would say to all the readers of the Banner who use tobacco, and are convinced that it is a sin in the sight of God, and offensive to many, if not all those who have cleansed themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, in God's name be free, be clean, be pure. Never tell it again to mortal that you must use it; or that Jesus cannot save you from it. But determine to be free, and obey God. He will take away your desire for tobacco. Jesus is the only great sin remedy. He can save from all the effects of the fall. He saves me fully. LEWIS S. POST.

If the reader uses tobacco, he will find it blessed to imitate this noble example. Stop now, and look to the Lord for help. M. G.
